BUILDING ACCORD IS BELIEVED NEAR IN A REVISED PLAN

$39-Proposal Would Stand but Pay Schedule Would Cost Less Over 3 Years

By DAMON STETSON
Special to The New York Times
A possible break in the strike of apartment house employees that started May 3 appeared imminent yesterday as both sides were reported to be considering a formula for resolving their differences. Members of the Realty Advisory Board, representing 1,600 landlords and cooperatives, were scheduled to meet this morning to act on a revised package.

Details were not disclosed, but sources close to the behind-the-scenes discussions yesterday said it included some reshuffling of the recommendations originally made by a special panel named by Mayor Beame. The overall package, these sources said, would still add up to $39 a week over three years, as the panel had proposed, but because of the rearrangement of the cost during the term of the contract would be less.

How It Could Be Done

One way this could be achieved would be for a small increase to be paid in the first year and larger ones in the second and third. In this way, most of the cost would fall toward the end of the contract, lessening the total cost to the landlords.

According to the landlords' tabulation, such a rearrangement could save them an average of about $4.50 a week over the three-year term of the contract. The position of the striking union, Local 32B of the Service Employees-International Union, was not decided, although its

PRESIDENT SEEKS CASE FOR REVIEW OF BUSING ISSUE

Nessen Says Ford Has Told Levi to Intervene in an 'Appropriate' Dispute

By LESLEY OELSNER
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, May 18—President Ford has directed Attorney General Edward H. Levi to "look for an appropriate and proper case" in which to ask the Supreme Court to "re-examine" the use of busing as a means of integrating schools, Mr. Ford's press secretary, Ron Nessen, said today.

The President is leaving to Mr. Levi the decision whether the Boston school case is the appropriate one in which to intervene, Mr. Nessen said. Mr. Nessen's statement came in the aftermath of growing controversy both within the Administration and outside it over the tentative decision made by Mr. Levi just over a week ago and disclosed last Friday by sources familiar with it—to intervene in the high court on the side of opponents of Boston's court-ordered busing plan.

Neutral Stance Hinted

The press secretary made his statement at the White House press briefing as Mr. Levi was holding meetings this morning to discuss the matter, first with opponents of the Boston plan and then with civil rights leaders who oppose Justice Department intervention in the case. Mr. Levi, according to persons who attended each meeting, said very little to either group and sought to convey the impression that he wanted to hear both sides before making his final decision.

However, the anti-busing leaders—including Louise Day Hicks, president of the Boston City Council, and John J. McDonough, president of the Bos-

Vote Sets Back Georgian's Presidency Bid—Tydings Loses Comeback Drive

By BEN A. FRANKLIN
Special to The New York Times
BALTIMORE, May 18—Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California turned a 20-day campaign blitz in Maryland's Democratic Presidential preference primary tonight over Jimmy Carter.

Mr. Carter was ahead in the separate voting for delegates, since Mr. Brown had no state. But the 38-year-old Californian's victory in the popular vote in his first election test gave him momentum for future races and represented a clear setback for Mr. Carter, a former Georgia Governor.

President Ford easily defeated former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California in the Republican race. The President was expected to gather most of the 43 Maryland delegates to the Republican convention.

With 83 percent of 1,546 precincts reporting, the tally was:

REPUBLICANS
Ford 73,852 (57%)
Reagan 54,755 (43%)

DEMOCRATS
Brown 212,526 (48%)
Carter 170,304 (38%)

Victories in Michigan and Maryland Believed to Assure Convention Fight

By R. W. APPLE JR.
Some of the territory on which the remaining primaries and caucuses will be fought is favorable to the President, some of his adversary from California.

On the Democratic side, it was a second consecutive Tuesday of disappointment for former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, whose nomination had been viewed as highly probable by most elements of the party as recently as two weeks ago.

The Georgian did far less well than expected in Michigan, despite the backing of important labor and black leaders, and he lost in Maryland to Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California, a late entrant into the Presidential race. He had lost Maryland in five primaries within the last month.

Ford Delays Swearing In Of Election Unit Members

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.

WASHINGTON, May 18—President Ford held up payment of more than $2 million in campaign subsidies for another week today by refusing to swear in five members of the Federal Election Commission until the Senate confirms the sixth.

As a result, none of the accumulated subsidy money will be available for the six Presidential primaries taking place May 25—in Oregon, Idaho, Nevada, Arkansas, Kentucky and Tennessee. Had the President sworn in the five commission members today, payments could have been made within an hour or two.

In all those primaries, Ronald Reagan is challenging President Ford for the Republican nomi-

Victory in Home State Revives Drive After Series of Losses

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS
Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, May 18—President Ford revived his troubled campaign tonight by sweeping to a home-state victory over Ronald Reagan in the critical Michigan Republican Presidential primary.

Jimmy Carter, the former Governor of Georgia, held a narrow lead over Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona in the state's Democratic primary.

The election was considered vital to the prospects of Mr. Ford, who had feared embarrassment or possible defeat in the state that he had represented in the House for more than 25 years. The President had been beaten by Mr. Reagan, the former Governor of California, in five primaries within the last month.

Crucial for Udall, too, it was just as vital to Mr. Udall. He had made a major effort in Michigan, where he was trying to slow what he called Mr. Carter's bandwagon. A loss by Mr. Udall would raise grave questions about his ability to survive as a realistic candidate.

With 4,188, or 66 percent, of 6,331 precincts reporting the tally was:

REPUBLICANS
Ford 436,402 (64%)

DEMOCRATS
With 4,232 precincts:
Carter 203,940 (44%)
Udall 185,109 (42%)
Wallace 32,732 (7%)

According to a sampling of 1,002 Republican voters made by The New York Times and CBS News after the voters cast their ballots, Mr. Ford defeated Mr. Reagan in virtually every segment of the electorate.

The sampling of Republican voters, along with a similar sampling of 838 Democrats, suggested that the crossover vote in both parties, while substantial, was smaller than some had expected.

Support by Wallace Group
Mr. Ford was scoring heavily among those Republicans in the sample who said they preferred the stands on issues taken by Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama.

Mr. Wallace was also on the ballot here, where he won the Democratic primary four years ago. He campaigned again this time, but ran well behind his Democratic rivals, Mr. Carter and Mr. Udall.

The New York Times/CBS News sampling showed that Mr. Carter's greatest strength was among blue-collar voters,

Stars Join a Benefit Gala For Carnegie's 85 Years

Leonard Berstein was there to conduct members of the New York Philharmonic, and also to play the harpsichord in Bach's double violin concerto with Yehudi Menuhin and Isaac Stern as solo violinists. Vladimir Horowitz, in a matchless submerging of ego, had agreed to play the piano accompaniment to Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau singing lieder by Schumann, Mstislav Rostropovich and cello were there, and so was the Oratorio Society, returning to sing the Pater Noster by Tchaikovsky, which it gave during the inaugural festival in 1891.

Celebrating 85 years of peerless sound from the world's great musicians, Carnegie Hall invited this select group of them—plus anyone who could put up $1,000 or more (even $200,000) for seats in the orchestra and first-tier boxes. Above those generous groundings—and moneyed box-dwellers sat those who had contributed the odd coins—sums as small as $100, even $25.

"We are not saving it," said Mr. Stern, the violinist who led the rescue operation for Carnegie Hall 16 years ago. "We're giving the lady

Lunches for Pupils Given Poor Marks

By MIMI SHERATON

New York City children are being fed school lunches that are both unappetizing and often far below minimum standards of sound nutrition.

Faced with food that is all too frequently soggy, salty, did not meet the minimum nutrient requirements set down by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The meals eaten in New York City schools often are served in crowded, drab feeding halls to rushed children in hats and coats who have only 20 minutes to line up for food, eat it and then line up again to dispose of the trays.

To eat the food, they frequently are crammed on benches at narrow tables as they try to cut meat, scoop up soup or wind up spaghetti with a spork, a diabolical utensil that is a sort of papery plastic ice-cream scoop with blunt tines at the tip.

Only a few schools offer spoons for soup, and no children are given knives, for reasons that are depressing and obvious.

In New York City, 556,225 lunches are served on an average day to youngsters in public and nonprofit parochial schools at the elementary and junior and senior high levels. Of the total, 92 percent of the meals are given without cost to the youngsters who qualify because they come from low-income homes.

President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing of France before addressing joint session of Congress in House. Applauding are Vice President Rockefeller and Speaker Carl Albert.

Giscard, Before Congress, Stresses Ties

By DAVID BENDER
 Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 18—President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing of France addressed a joint meeting of the two houses of Congress today, appealing to the United States on behalf of Western Europe to "show the same confidence in us that we have in you."

He coupled the appeal with a firm statement supporting the policy of détente and cooperation with Communist countries. He did so both before Congress and before a large number of guests at a luncheon given by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

Remarking that France and the United States had begun struggling together "for liberty" 200 years ago, the French leader said that in the world of today "diversity and change are our work and the consequence of our principles—they are the children of liberty."

Therefore, he said, America should "view Europe's achievements without misgivings and without apprehension."

"You do not fear freedom for yourself, do not then fear it for your friends and allies," he continued, in an apparent allusion to the Ford Administration's recent expressions of concern over the prospect of Communist parties entering coalition governments in Italy or France.

The House chamber, about three-quarters filled by legislators, diplomats and Administration officials, gave the French leader a warm reception. He delivered a 35-minute address, speaking slowly and precisely, in slightly accented English.

He stirred applause not with his remarks about détente or West European politics, but with statements reaffirming France's western defense commitments and reliance on American security commitments.

"France will continue her action in the future loyal to her commitments," he said. "She will continue to contribute to the effectiveness of the Atlantic alliance, of which she is a firm supporter."

"In view of this and with concern for symmetry, which is in the tradition of our logic, France sets the greatest store by America's commitment," he said.

President de Gaulle withdrew French armed forces from the Atlantic Treaty Organization in 1967, but France has continued to participate in NATO ministerial consultations.

France, while pursuing a détente policy, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing said, was "ready to make the effort and sacrifice" in helping defend the Western countries "against the forces of intimidation and falsehood."

He observed: "Détente is an open and sincere approach. It requires perseverance. It means we must keep our eyes open. It must be based on reciprocity. But opting for détente is the opposite of relaxing our moral defenses."

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing also suggested that France and the United States had much to gain in cooperative efforts to ease crisis tensions in various areas—mentioning Cyprus, Lebanon and southern Africa.

He concluded that freedom lay "at the root of all we do today, and it speaks in our hearts, in my heart, as in the hearts of all men, with full voice of hope."

This drew the assemblage to its feet for the third standing ovation—two of them lasting more than a minute. He was the 45th foreign leader to address a joint meeting of the Congress since the Marquis de Lafayette spoke on Dec. 10, 1824.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, who flew here yesterday for a six-day state visit, carried his détente theme on to the lunch-session at the State Department, albeit in the form of wit.

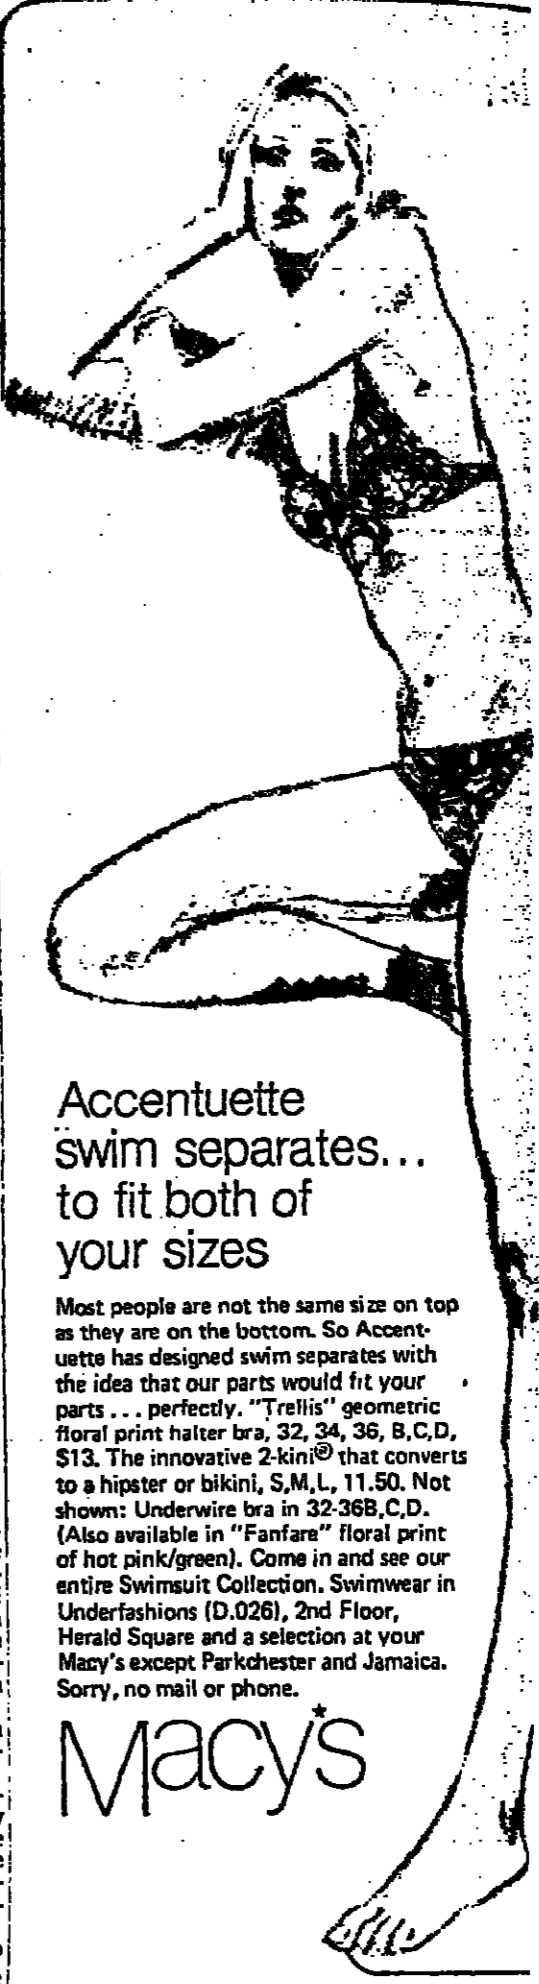

Speaking of the Ford Administration's difficulties with the word "détente"—which President Ford publicly banished from his vocabulary last March in the Florida primary campaign—Mr. Giscard d'Estaing pointedly pronounced it in the French as "day-tant" and added: "Better to have difficulties in pronouncing it than in understanding it."

Later on, he urged his American listeners "to keep as many Gallicisms as possible, because we need dialogue, for the knowledge that leads to understanding and the understanding that leads to friendship."

Teasing Mr. Kissinger, who had read a toast from a text, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing said, "I only have the menu." He also acknowledged some problems with the English language, saying: "Partnership—what kind of boat is that? A ship full of partners?" But he also paid tribute to Mr. Kissinger as a man of peace and of "a global view."

Mr. Kissinger, who had spoken of Mr. Giscard d'Estaing as a man of "vision, humanity and dedication to peace," also teased the French leader, saying the two of them were "members of an endangered species, known as independent republicans."

This evening, the Giscard d'Estaing played host to President and Mrs. Ford at the French Embassy residence. Tomorrow, they begin a trip that will take them to Yorktown, Va.; Philadelphia, Mount Vernon, Houston, New Orleans, and Pascagoula, Miss.

Israelis Kill Another Arab; Lethal Riot Curb Urged

By TERENCE SMITH
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, May 18—Israeli troops today used tear gas, which was used to no avail today, these of stone-throwing include such items as electric batons, which are used by British forces in Northern Ireland. They administer a shock but are not deadly.

Beyond using new equipment, the military authorities on the West Bank are determined to do more by the use of large-scale curfews and other preventive techniques, to keep demonstrations from erupting into rioting.

"This is a problem that is obviously going to be with us for some time," an officer observed today. "We'll have to find new and more effective ways of dealing with it."

The only really effective solution, most Israelis agree, will be a political settlement that will resolve the future status of the area. Nothing of the kind is on the horizon, however, and in the interim, the Israeli Army is now faced with a new drain on its manpower and equipment resources.

The main riot-control responsibility falls on the paramilitary border police force, which was originally designed to protect Israel's frontier settlements from infiltration and sabotage. The task has proved too much for the West Bank, however, and additional army units have been called in.

Most of these soldiers have no training in riot control and are thus inclined to panic when confronted by an angry and violent mob. In addition, in the present tense atmosphere on the West Bank, every Israeli soldier in a jeep or truck becomes a potential target. Israeli military sources said that they were curtailing traffic in the occupied areas to the necessary minimum during periods of unrest.

Libyan Vows Support of Lebanese Left

By HENRY TANNER
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, May 20—Prime Minister Abdul Salam Jalloud of Libya, who came here yesterday as a mediator, left today after having said that Libya stood firmly behind the Lebanese alliance of Moslems and leftists as well as the Palestinians and endorsed their demands.

He went to Damascus early today for talks with President Hafez al-Assad.

Major Jalloud's mission, according to diplomats, was intended to prevent a further deterioration of the conflict that has put Syria on one side and the Palestine Liberation Organization and Lebanese Moslems and leftists on the other.

But his parting statement left observers here puzzled about Libya's intentions.

The dispute between Syria and Moslem-leftist alliance centers Moslem-Leftist alliance centers on these issues:

4 The Syrian land and sea blockade of territory held by Moslems and Palestinians, which for the last two months has kept arms from reaching the forces of the Palestinian guerrillas and those of the Lebanese Moslems.

4 A fear of the Palestinians—by the relatively moderate leadership of Yasir Arafat to the extremist factions of George Habash and Ahmed Jibril—that the Syrian intervention in Lebanon is intended to bring the guerrilla movement under Syrian control and thus give Damascus a free hand to pursue an Egyptian-style policy of accommodation with the United States and Israel.

Interests of Arabs Cited

Major Jalloud, in his departing statement, said that Libya supported the demands of the Lebanese Moslem left, of the Lebanese Arab Army, which is the deserter force headed by Lieut. Ahmed al-Khatib, and the Palestinian guerrillas.

He also said the "pan-Arab interests" required solution to the Lebanese civil war, now more than a year old.

The demands of the Lebanese Moslem left, which Libya now supports, were stated in a policy declaration last week.

They include the withdrawal of Syrian and Syrian-controlled forces from Lebanon, the reorganization of the Lebanese Army around the nucleus of Lieutenant Khatib's Moslem forces and a conference on political and social changes including the end of Lebanon's political system of apportioning posts among religious communities.

These demands are unacceptable to Syria and the conservative Christians in Lebanon.

Major Jalloud's reference to

"pan-Arab interests" was seen as an effort to bring about the "Arabization" of the Lebanese conflict, meaning to bring in Arab countries, in addition to Syria, as active and official arbiters in the conflict.

Syria has strenuously opposed the so-called "Arabization."

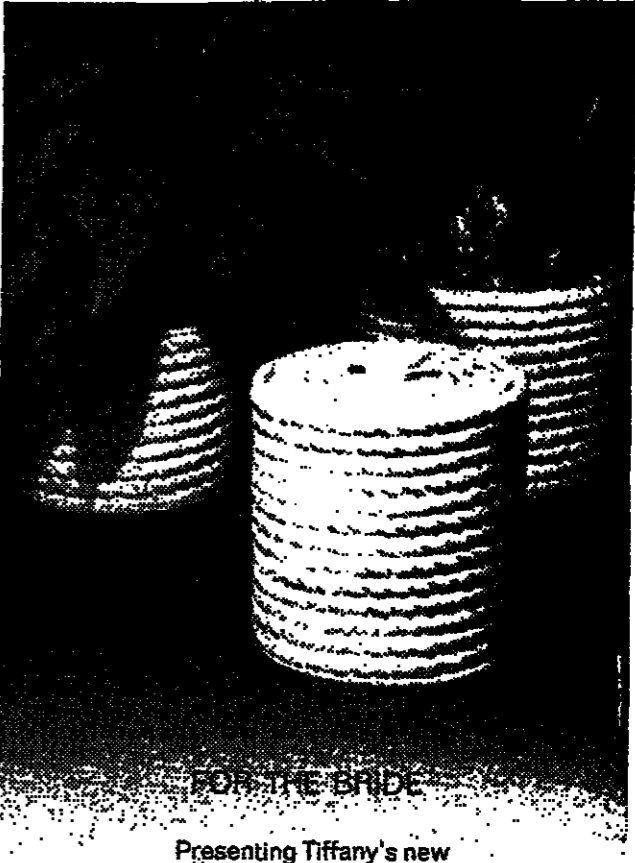

Kamal Jumblat, head of the leftist-Moslem alliance, has publicly demanded it, and so has the leadership of the Palestinian movement.

Syria appears to have reluctantly accepted a degree of Arab involvement. Major Jalloud's mission, which started in Damascus over the weekend is part of this policy. So is the meeting beginning tomorrow in Riyadh between the Prime Ministers of Syria and Egypt, with Saudi and Kuwait participation.

Beirut was relatively peaceful today with only occasional shelling, but there was sharp ground fighting all along the line between the Christian and Moslem areas.

Heavy mortars and 155-millimeter field guns shelled both sides of the city, causing casualties.

Senate Panel Approves 5-Year Treaty With Spain

By ID GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 16—The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved a five-year treaty with Spain that would allow the United States to use naval facilities at Rota, on the Atlantic Coast, and air bases in Torrejon, Zaragoza, and Moron. But the United States has agreed to remove its Poseidon-class nuclear submarines from Rota by July 1979.

Senator Claiborne Pell, Democrat of Rhode Island, contended that the treaty's approval was vital for Spain's political evolution. "If we don't pass this treaty, we can throw Spain back into the political dark ages," he said.

The United States is obliged by the treaty to provide, over the next five years: $600 million in military credits; $450 million in Export-Import Bank loans principally to purchase equipment for nuclear power plants; $75 million in unspecified military grants; and $10 million to train Spanish military personnel.

In addition, the United States will provide: $50 million in grants to improve Spain's air defense network; $35 million in grants for educational, cultural and technical assistance; the lease of 42 F-4E Phantom jet fighter-bombers for $53 million; $55 million for the sale of 34 older-model F-4C planes back to the United States; 72 F-16 planes to be delivered in the future; four minesweepers and one minesweeper tender at favorable prices.

Because of political trends in Spain since the death of Franco, the Foreign Relations Committee was generally in favor of the agreement, and few voices have been heard against it.

But action was delayed because of the provisions obligating the United States to provide $1.2 billion in aid and other benefits to Spain over the five-year period.

Congress Holds Strings

Discussions involving Senators Dick Clark, Democrat of Iowa, Clifford P. Case, Republican of New Jersey, Thomas F. Eagleton, Democrat of Missouri, Mr. Pell, and others with Ambassador-at-large Robert J. McCloskey, who negotiated the treaty, resulted in a formula attached to the resolution passed today.

It said that the sums specified in the treaty "shall be made available for obligation through the normal procedures of the Congress."

It said that this included "the process of prior authorization and annual appropriations, and shall be provided to Spain in accordance with the provisions of foreign assistance and related legislation."

In short, the committee—with Administration concurrence—was stating that it reserved the right to alter the aid allocations, even though this would give Spain cause to abrogate the treaty. Several Senate staff members said that there was a "gentlemen's agreement" not to tamper with the aid pledge so long as the political situation did not turn dramatically worse in Spain.

W.H.O. Threatening Call for Israel's Suspension

Special to The New York Times

May 18—The Arab League is threatening to suspend Israel from the World Health Organization because of the organization's refusal to accept a resolution denouncing Israel's occupation of territories.

The resolution, which was adopted by a vote of 18 to 14, with 14 abstentions, rejecting Israel's refusal to accept a resolution denouncing Israel's occupation of territories.

The new resolution, deep concern is expressed over such alleged Israeli practices as "mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population." Israel is also accused of "eviction, deportation and expulsion" of Arabs.

C.I.A. Says It Has Underestimated Soviet Defense Cost

Special to The New York Times
 WASHINGTON, May 8—The Central Intelligence Agency has nearly doubled its estimate of how much the Soviet Economy is devoted to defense as a result of a conclusion that it has been greatly underestimated the cost of Soviet weapons production.

The higher estimate does not reflect any growth in Soviet military strength, but it does provide new hypotheses on the priorities of the Soviet leadership in weighing civilian versus defense expenditures.

The latest C.I.A. estimate, made public by the House Armed Services Committee and Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin, is that the Soviet Union spends about 5.5 percent of its gross national product on defense.

Soviet Desert Area Struck by Tremors For the Second Day

MOSCOW, May 18 (Reuters)—New earth tremors today struck the Kyzyl Kum desert area of Soviet Central Asia, where a powerful earthquake yesterday caused serious damage, the Tass press agency reported.

It said that the tremors, which had the same epicenter as the previous quake, registered 3 to 4 points on the 12-point scale.

Monday's quake reached 9 points at the epicenter and 8 points in the Uzbek gas-field town of Gazli, 40 miles away. Relief operations are under way in the populated areas hit by the earthquake, Tass said. The report did not mention casualties.

However, the agency said, building materials, food and medical supplies were being shipped to Uzbekistan.

Gazli was the town hardest hit in yesterday's quake, Tass said, but communications have been restored with Bukhara and construction teams are arriving from the surrounding area.

to 13 percent of the Soviet gross national product is devoted to defense. Previously, the C.I.A. had estimated that defense was absorbing 6 to 8 percent of the gross national product, an estimate that Defense Department analysts have said was far too low. In comparison, the United States spends about 5.5 percent of its gross national product on defense.

In a letter to Senator Proxmire, George Bush, the Director of Central Intelligence, said that the upward revision "does not indicate that the Soviets have any more weapons of manpower than previously estimated, but rather that the cost of these defense programs is greater than we originally had estimated."

At the same time, the study said, "we see no evidence that economic considerations are deterring the Soviets from continuing the present pace and magnitude of their defense effort."

The C.I.A. publication, titled "Estimated Soviet Defense Spending in Rubles, 1950-75," noted that the intelligence agency had obtained new information that had led to the conclusion that the Soviet defense industries were less efficient than formerly believed and that the ruble costs of weapons and equipment was higher than previously estimated.

As a result, the study said, "the resource impact of the defense effort on the Soviet economy has been considerably greater than we previously recognized."

"We now realize that the Soviet leaders have been more willing than we thought to forego economic growth and consumer satisfaction in favor of military capabilities," the report said.

The C.I.A. estimated that Soviet spending for defense programs grew from 40-45 billion rubles in 1970 to 50-55 billion rubles in 1975, as measured in 1970 prices. One ruble is about $1.30.

Under a broader definition to include the military-operated space program, the C.I.A. said total defense spending would be 5 billion rubles more.

The new estimates for 1975 are about twice the previous estimates. About 90 percent of the increase, the study said, "is accounted for by our new understanding of Soviet prices and costs."

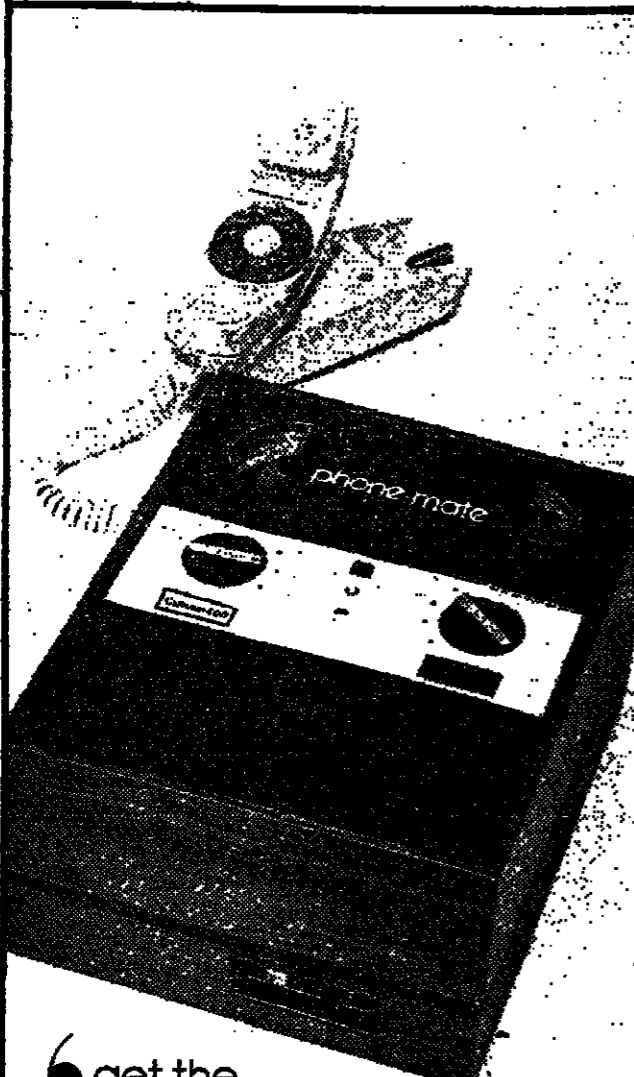

The figure estimated that over the last five years Soviet defense spending in rubles had been growing at an average annual rate of 4 to 5 percent rather than the 3 percent previously estimated. The study said it represents only part of total defense spending would grow at a more moderate rate as the Soviet Union completes the deployment of a new generation of strategic missiles.

The study observed that the annual growth in the gross national product "is large enough to allow both increases in defense spending and at least slow improvements in living standards."

Furthermore, it said, even the present level of defense investment programs is so high that with modest rates of growth, or even with a constant level of spending, inventories of military equipment would continue to rise.

Britain Also Gives Data — Defense Secretary Roy Mason said today in a written Parliamentary statement that new defense studies indicated the Soviet Union spent more than 50 billion rubles on defense last year.

The figure contrasts with the official Soviet figure of 17.4 billion rubles announced in the 1976 budget. Western experts believe that the official figure represents only part of total defense costs.

EXECUTIONS REPORTED IN CHINA

Last Month's Riots
Did Not Get 30-Year
'Education' Terms

May 18 (Agence France Presse) — Two persons guilty of taking part in an An Men Square riot were executed by firing squad at the end of the month, an informed source said.

10 other rioters were sentenced to 30 years of "re-education through labor" through manual labor, the source said.

They were slayed by tens of thousands of supporters of the Chinese party government in a protest against a recent antigovernment rally.

At the end of April, a reliable source said that three persons had been found guilty of "organizing a counter-revolutionary meeting" held at Peking University on April 29. They were sentenced to 30 years of "re-education through labor" and three received 30 years of "re-education through labor" of them were work-ers in the capital while the others were in the provinces.

The son of Yao Teng-tsun, a former Chinese diplomat, played an important role in the Cultural Revolution and of an extreme left-wing organization that has been condemned. His organization was responsible for the burning of the British embassy here in 1968 and for the office of Prime Minister Chou En-lai in the People's Daily.

Members of the Chinese military are to be under way, said here today on the provincial radio. The stations said that military districts had had commanders appointed. Observers said this probably had been taken as a sign of the dismissal of Deputy Premier Teng Hsiaochuan. The Chinese press today reported Mr. Teng of having been dismissed as "Soviet revisionist."

The accusation, published for the first time, was a blow against Mr. Teng who was stripped of his rank and other "capitalist" titles in the leadership, who was under attack in a magazine Sunday. The president dismissed during the Revolution, and former defense Minister Lin Biao, whose life in September was reportedly after an abortive attempt to flee to the Soviet Union in had also been accused of "capitalist revisionism" so as to serve the interests of the "new czars" in

Mr. Welcomes
at Future Meeting

JOHN F. BURNS
The New York Times
JOHN F. BURNS — Prime Minister Vorster re-appeared today to the White House to meet with Ford at some point in the tense situation in Africa.

The Minister, speaking to Cape Town Press, said that Mr. Ford had issued an invitation had made it plain that a meeting would be necessary.

White House said that President Ford plans to meet with Vorster or Prime Minister D. Smith of South Africa. The Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's visit was announced by a speech in Lusaka, Zambia, capital, in which he declared United States support for majority rule in South Africa and urged the independence of the continent.

Officials were sharply critical of Mr. Kissinger for his role in the future of southern Africa. The Minister said that the United States will not support the apartheid system in South Africa, and that the United States will not support the apartheid system in South Africa.

Mr. Vorster said today that he had met with Mr. Ford and that he had done a lot of good work in South Africa, but that the world in general is not doing its part.

He said that he was more optimistic about the future of South Africa than he had been in the past, and that he was more optimistic about the future of South Africa than he had been in the past.

Eritrean Rebels Stall Northward March by Thousands of Ethiopian Peasants

Government denies that it has planned a peasant march into Eritrea, evidence over the last week makes it clear that an attempt is under way to crush the guerrillas.

A Promise of Land

According to diplomatic sources, the Government has planned a four-pronged attack using thousands of peasants armed with 40,000 bolt-action rifles and machine guns. The peasants have been promised land grants in Eritrea, and village elders have told the predominantly Christian farmers that a virtual holy war was necessary against the rebels, many of them Moslems.

Estimates of the number of peasants taking part in the march range from 10,000 to 250,000. Several sources here say reports along the route indicate that 20,000 to 30,000 farmers have been picked up by the 700 trucks and buses that left the capital more than 10 days ago.

Fuel Stations Alerted

Fuel stations along the two main roads to Eritrea have been told to keep their tanks full for the convoy, medical personnel have been moved north, and foreign missionaries and other non-Ethiopians have been called to Asmara. Peasant rallies over the last two months stirred a nearby religious fervor for the march. There are also indications that many village youths have been drafted.

Nearly 20,000 Government troops, half the Ethiopian army, are in Eritrea, bolstered by tanks, motorized units and airpower. One problem in the army in Eritrea is said to be discipline.

Many of the soldiers, stationed in the province for years, have married Eritrean women and have been reluctant to crush the rebel movement.

Rebels Number 25,000

The factions of rebels—the Eritrean Liberation Front and the Popular Liberation Forces of Eritrea—are estimated at 25,000, and are reportedly backed by Syria, Iraq, Libya and South Yemen. A military success plan to push toward the Sudanese border. One is to seek strategic Red Sea coastlines in what is called "handic country" under guerrilla control.

Today about 5,000 people, shouting, dancing and swinging palm leaves, marched along the sun-drenched streets of downtown Addis Ababa in a government-sponsored demonstration supporting the regime's Eritrean policies.

The march followed Sunday night's speech by Brig. Gen. Teferi Banti, chairman of the military government, who offered the Eritreans a degree of autonomy, financial aid and an amnesty for political prisoners in return for peace in the province.

The Eritrean guerrillas insist on independence for the province of three million. The Government says that some Arab nations as well as imperialists, are exploiting the secessionist movement.

Arab Claim Rebuffed

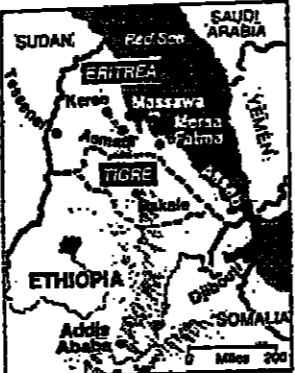

The Ethiopian Herald, the official newspaper, said today: "Disruptive forces have been straining every nerve and since in a vain attempt to convince the world and themselves that Eritrea is part of the Arab world. No stretch of the imagination can show this to be true. Eritrea has been and will always remain part and parcel of Ethiopia."

Why the military offensive has been started now remains unclear since the rainy season begins in fewer than three weeks, making the rebel-held territory virtually impassable.

By most accounts, the attack has not yet reached Eritrea, the Popular Liberation Forces of Eritrea having been stalled by the guerrillas.

But once inside Eritrea, two columns of peasants reportedly plan to push toward the Sudanese border. One is to seek strategic Red Sea coastlines in what is called "handic country" under guerrilla control, while other marchers are to strike farther south.

Other armed peasant volunteers are reportedly due to town Addis Ababa in a government-sponsored demonstration supporting the regime's Eritrean policies.

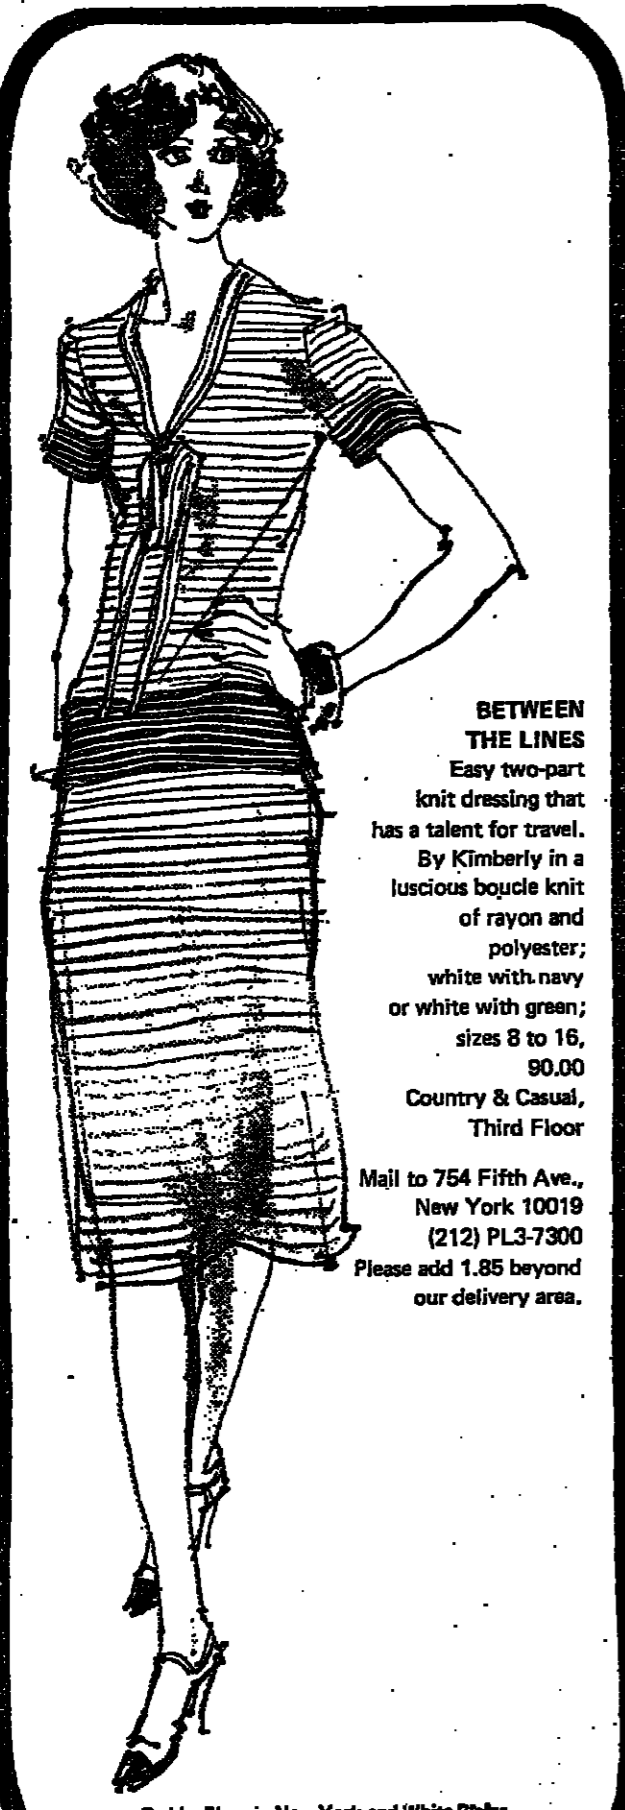

The New York Times/May 19, 1976

Northward march of army of peasants to oppose rebels in Eritrea has reportedly been stalled in Province of Tigre.

U.S. THINKS MEXICO WILL NOT JOIN OPEC

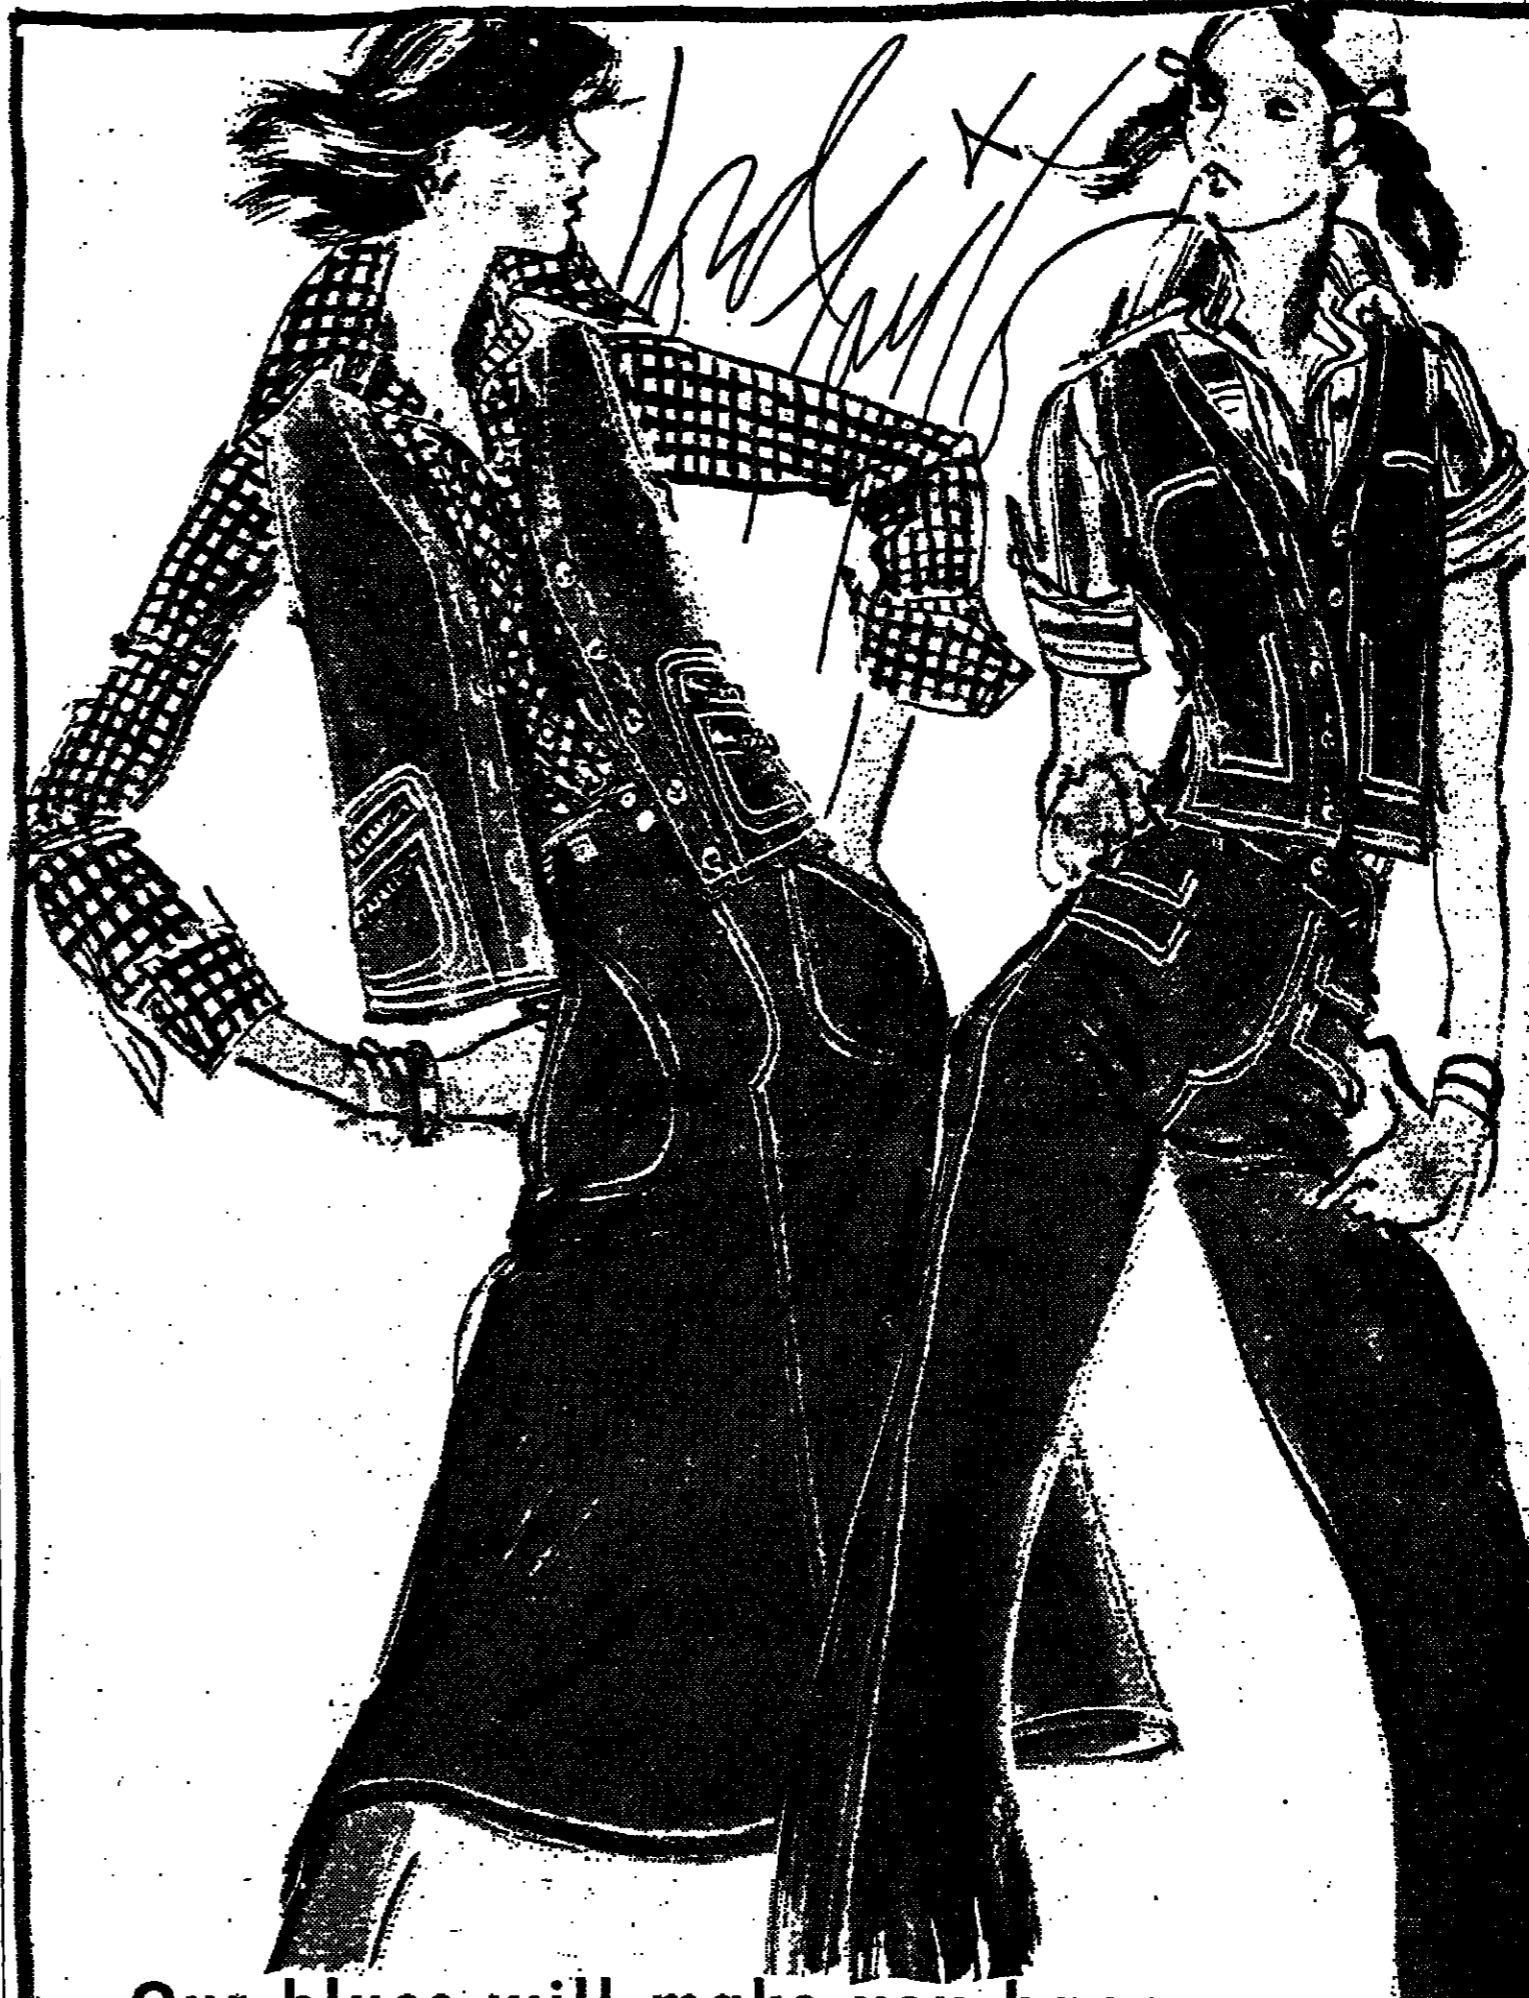

Special to The New York Times

CANCUN, Mexico, May 18—Mexico has no apparent intention of joining the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries even though its oil exports may exceed one million barrels a day by 1980, the Assistant United States Secretary of the Treasury, Gerald L. Parsky, said here today.

During a news conference after talks between United States and Mexican officials attending the annual meeting of the Inter-American Development Bank, Mr. Parsky contradicted recent reports that Mexico would join the organization "if invited." He added that "the Mexican Government clearly recognizes the drawbacks of membership."

Among these drawbacks, he noted, OPEC membership would mean that Mexican manufactured exports would no longer benefit from the United States' system of preferences, while its oil exports would be subject to OPEC's pricing system. At present, Mexico's oil exports—about 105,000 barrels a day—are sold at OPEC prices.

Mr. Parsky said that estimates showed Mexico's daily oil output growing from 300,000 barrels last year to about two million barrels in 1980. "This would permit Mexico to export more than one million barrels per day by 1980," he said.

Canada Announces It Will Not Resume Nuclear Aid to India

OTTAWA, May 18 (AP)—Foreign Secretary Allan MacEachen announced today that Canada had decided to make permanent its suspension of nuclear cooperation with India.

Nuclear cooperation was suspended in May 1974, when India exploded a nuclear test device made from plutonium from a small Canadian-supplied pilot reactor.

Since then, negotiations have been conducted here and in New Delhi aimed at getting India to agree to safeguards against use of Canadian-supplied material for nuclear explosions.

The permanent suspension means that Canada will not send what has been described as "a bit of plumbing and heavy water" to complete a RAPP II reactor sold to India. A RAPP I reactor already is in operation.

Cooperation 'Not Possible' India now is using Canadian technology to build other Canadian-style Candu reactors, in Madras without help from Canada.

Mr. MacEachen announced in the House of Commons that further cooperation with India in the nuclear field was not possible. He said that the Government here "has decided that it would agree to make new nuclear shipments only on an understanding by India that Canadian supplies, whether of technology, nuclear equipment or materials, whether past or future, shall not be used for the manufacture of a nuclear device."

The RAPP reactors have been covered by safeguards that are not so strong as those Canada is seeking from other potential customers.

In negotiations with India, Canada attempted to strengthen those safeguards, but was unable to get it to agree to put under the same safeguards a small Cyrus reactor that provided the plutonium for the Indian explosion in 1974, officials said.

IAN LABOR CHITTING MOOD

Government Pay Union Leaders New Course

The New York Times
May 18—Angered by the government's restrictive policies, Canadian trade union leaders meeting here today called for a new militant policy for their nation.
The Canadian Congress, representing two million organizations, has authorized general strikes to oppose the new policies introduced in October by Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.
The labor group has an equal role with the employers in the future economic position shown here in the government's policy of reflecting a degree of unity often quarreling labor officials though there was some support on the proposed strike, the plan was overwhelmingly rejected yesterday.

The industry of this country has been compelled to think and directing primarily an organization to one political movement," said the president of the old Congress, declaring in a keynote address.
Canadian solidarity was affirmed in a speech by Joseph P. Tonelli, vice president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., the Canadian organization's affiliate.
The speaker's experience with the Canadian Government's campaign is unreminiscent of our own forays into controls under the administration of former President
Richard Nixon. Mr.
Tonelli said the executive council of the group notified the government last month of its withdrawal from the anti-inflation program on the ground that it was strictly wages and salaries, and that effective mechanism to bring down prices.

Idea Guidelines
The anti-inflation program announced
by Mr. Trudeau
last week includes a range of 8 to 12 percent wage increases with some exceptions. The government is restricted in covering inflation.
The pay rises agreed between the government and the unions last week by the Anti-Inflation Board have some limitations. The board has set a limit on raises of 10 percent, and higher increases will be granted in other cases.
The board has just announced a program in which it will be for consumers to pay less at supermarkets, where companies are to supply commodities for customers. So far, two financial institutions have refused to participate in the program, which the Anti-Inflation Board said it would authorize when necessary.
The Mail of Toronto, said that sentiment by delegates was so overwhelming that the convention could not do so.
The Minister of Industry, Mr. Trudeau's Cabinet member, said the union organization was not invited to the convention, but that the union would support
a general strike.

India Says It Is Holding 7,000 In Clandestine Publishing Cases

By WILLIAM BORDERS
Special to The New York Times

NEW DELHI, May 18 — A very few established journalists among the people who were arrested in a drive to halt the flow of "objectionable literature" attacking the Indian Government, according to an official statement issued last night.

The statement did not say when the arrests had taken place. But it implied that the figure was a nationwide total of the number of people arrested for circulating clandestine newspapers during the 11 months since the declaration of a state of emergency and the suspension of civil liberties last June.

Estimates of the number of persons arrested for all reasons since June range upward from 29,000.

The disclosure on underground publishing activities was made by Om Mehta, the Minister of State for Home Affairs, in a private meeting yesterday with members of Parliament.

"Om Mehta told the meeting that the Government was determined to see that no one preached violence in the country," an official account of his remarks said, citing the danger of "objectionable literature inciting people to agitational and subversive activities."

The Minister of State "made it clear that India was wedded to democracy, that people were free to express their different opinions, but that did not mean that anybody would be free to preach violence openly," the account said.

Besides making the arrests, Mr. Mehta said, the Government has seized 34 presses that were used in the clandestine publishing, and "stringent action is being taken against all those involved in such activities."

India's newspapers are now subjected to rigid Government censorship, and there are only

Army Uses Teaching Machine To Improve Soldiers' Training

By DREW MIDDLETON

The Army reports significant improvements in individual training as a result of the extended use of a training aid known as the Training Extension Course, or TEC.

Army trainers believe TEC will be the main instructional method for the immediate and foreseeable future, replacing in most instances instruction by human trainers.

TEC is a multimedia system that operates in audio-visual, audio, printed text and job performance aids. Soldiers receive individualized instruction on or off duty. Most lessons include tests, with the machine stopping while the student writes his answer. He then presses a "proceed button" and the Beseler Cue/See machine resumes instruction, moving on to the next topic and question.

The range of TEC lessons is wide. The student receives instruction on various military skills, ranging from the assembly of the M-16 rifle to operation of the 105-millimeter gun. Other programs deal with military attitudes, such as the fundamentals of leadership.

Improvement Found

In one of the first units receiving the TEC system, 69 soldiers were tested after individual instruction. Only one passed, and the overall score was 37 percent. After the TEC lesson, "Call for Fire," 85 percent made a passing grade and the overall average score was 92 percent.

According to unit commanders interviewed at Army installations around the country, the system's major advantage is that the young soldier can repeat TEC lessons until he passes. Commanders find that they have more time for other aspects of training and that noncommissioned officers are freed from instructional duties.

The TEC machines have now been introduced in the National Guard, Army Reserve units and in many Reserve Officer Training Corps organizations. The machines are made by the Charles Beseler Company of Florham Park, N.J.

A recent study by the Army Research Institute showed that in both the active Army and National Guard units, soldiers trained by TEC performed significantly better and at less cost than those trained under the conventional human instructor program.

$8.4 Million Less

The cost of the TEC program, in 1975 dollars, for 100 hours of training annually in 1,064 battalion-sized units was $42.1 million, compared with $50.5 million for conventional training.

The system has proved effective in teaching weapon employment. Tests after TEC lessons in 13 different subjects, ranging from the hand grenade to the Chaparral antiaircraft missile, showed marks ranging from 81 percent to 93 percent, compared with marks of 13 to 53 percent after ordinary instruction.

Although the data does not deal with the individual soldier's retention of his TEC lessons, the Army has noted a "significant improvement" in training. Other Army findings are that the system appears to lead to marked increases in the soldier's general ability to learn.

TWA's on-time performance record beats American and United. Again.

People in the airline industry were shocked when TWA advertised better on-time performance than American and United.

No major airline had ever been so competitive.

Well, we think competition is healthy. Competing for your business is what makes our business even better.

For example, we know that being on time is the major concern of business flyers. So TWA has committed itself to being the best on-time airline in the business.

We've now had the best on-time record of the big three for 12 months in a row—right through this March.

Part of the TWA New York Team that made the on-time performance record possible.

This claim is based on the percentage of domestic flights actually flown which arrived on time, within 15 minutes of schedule as shown in CAB records. This represents 55% of TWA's available seat miles.

And even though we're ahead, we're still trying. In April TWA had its best month ever in on-time performance. 93% of all domestic flights arrived on time, within 15 minutes of schedule.

Competition may be difficult. But it's the driving force behind TWA. It's what's made us the on-time airline.

Being the best isn't everything. It's the only thing.*

Johnson, Nixon Linked to Spying in U.S.

WASHINGTON, May 18 (AP)—Presidents Johnson and Nixon applied pressure on the Central Intelligence Agency that brought about a domestic spy operation that the agency's director, Richard Helms, knew violated its charter, according to a Senate intelligence committee staff report.

Operation Chaos, designed to uncover the foreign influence behind domestic unrest, lasted from 1967 to 1974 despite repeated findings that student and racial demonstrations at home were not directed or financed from abroad, the report added.

At its peak, Operation Chaos carried the names of 300,000 Americans in a computerized index and maintained separate files on some 7,500 citizens, according to the report released today. Information in the files included intelligence on domestic political activity gathered from electronic eavesdropping, mail opening undercover agents and Federal Bureau of Investigation reports, the staff study said.

As an example of the scope of the Chaos, the report cited the C.I.A.'s request to the National Security Agency for material picked up from international phone calls and telegrams "regardless of how innocuous the information may appear."

'Step Toward Secret Police'

The staff report called the operation's gathering of information on domestic political activity "a step toward the dangers of a domestic secret police."

"Operation Chaos was not an intelligence mission sought by the C.I.A.," the report stressed. Presidents Johnson and Nixon pressed Mr. Helms, then the director, to determine the extent of hostile foreign influence on domestic unrest, and the agency's repeated negative findings only led to pressure for a more thorough investigation, according to the report.

In February 1969, Mr. Helms sent a written warning "to Henry Kissinger for President Nixon" that "this is an area not within the charter of this agency, so I need to advise you how extremely sensitive this makes the [report on student unrest]. Should anyone learn of its existence, it would prove most embarrassing for all concerned."

The C.I.A. charter bars it.

ACTION OF CONGRESS SCORED BY BURGER

WASHINGTON, May 18 (UPI)—Chief Justice Warren E. Burger said today that Congress was frustrating the judiciary by passing unworkable laws and refusing to provide badly needed judges.

"There should be the closest kind of cooperation between the legislative and judicial branches and respect for the views of experienced judges who must make the laws work," he told the American Law Institute at the start of its annual week-long meeting here.

The Chief Justice focused particularly on the Speedy Trial Act. He said the law had been passed despite repeated arguments against it by the United States Judicial Conference, the administrative agency for the Federal court system.

The law unconditionally requires the release of accused persons who are not tried within 90 days of arrest. But Justice Burger said that some complex cases could not be prepared in twice that time and should not be subject to such rigid requirements.

"This action was taken precisely within the same time period when action on desperately needed additional Federal judges had been pending for four years," he said.

2 U.S. Frigates Due to Visit 4 West African Ports

WASHINGTON, May 18 (Reuters)—Two United States warships will visit several West African ports late this month on their way to the Indian Ocean to relieve ships of the U.S. Middle East Force, the Navy said.

The frigate Donald B. Beary is scheduled to visit Dakar, Senegal, and Monrovia, Liberia. The frigate Capodanno will visit Conakry, Guinea, and Banjul, Gambia.

After the visits the warships will enter the Mediterranean and pass through the Suez Canal into the Indian Ocean, the Navy said.

The 52-page document, which disclosed few new details about Operation Chaos, provided extensive descriptions of three related projects—Merrimack, Resistance and Project 2.

Persons Followed Home

Merrimack began in 1967 as an effort to infiltrate dissident groups in Washington, D.C., to obtain advance information about demonstrations against C.I.A. facilities, the report said. It said that the projects, using construction workers and trade-union members as part-time agents, was gradually expanded to include "any information about the plans and attitudes" of such groups as the Women Strike for Peace, the Washington Peace Center, the Congress of Racial Equality and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee.

In some instances, photographs were taken and persons were followed to their homes, the report said. Merrimack, which by the C.I.A.'s own testimony exceeded the agency's legitimate security interests, lasted until September 1970.

Resistance, which lasted from 1967 to 1973, "compiled information about radical groups around the country, particularly on campuses," the report said.

The project developed some 600 to 700 files consisting mainly of newspaper clippings, but also including information from confidential sources in the local community such as campus officials and police authorities," according to the report.

Project 2 began in 1970 as a separate operation in which agents entered American universities in preparation for undercover assignments abroad, the report said.

"While preparing for their future assignments, they provided considerable information on their associates, dissident organizations, demonstration plans and sometimes personal information," the report said.

President Seeks Case for Review of Busing Issue; Nessen Says Ford Has Told Levi to Intervene memorandum asks for less cutback on Boston's court-dered busing than did his initial memorandum, according to a source familiar with them. At one of the meetings today, one participant said, Mr. Bork stated that the department would "recognize" in any brief that there had been "wide-spread de jure segregation" (resulting from Government ac- tion) in Boston; that there was a need for some busing as a remedy; and that the issue was the scope of busing that was necessary. Mr. Nessen's statement con- trasted somewhat with his answers at yesterday's White House press briefing to ques- tions about the reports of Mr. Levi's consideration of inter- vention in the Boston case. Asked then whether Mr. Ford had spoken to Mr. Levi about whether he would intervene, Mr. Nessen replied, "As far as I know he doesn't plan to." He also said at yesterday's briefing that Mr. Ford had been asked about the matter while he was in Michigan over the weekend and that the President had replied that it was a matter for the Justice Department. In addition, at yesterday's meet- ing, Mr. Nessen said, "I do not know of any contact or plans for meetings" between Mr. Ford and Mr. Levi. Mr. Nessen's statement to- day also contrasts with ac- counts that Senator Brooke has given the press of a conversa- tion he had with Mr. Ford last Thursday night, in which the Senator argued against inter- vention.

Mr. Brooke, on Sunday, quoted Mr. Ford as saying, "Ed- certainly this has not been done with my consent or di- rection." Yesterday, at a news conference in Boston, Senator Brooke said that in the Thurs- day night conversation, Mr. Ford "acted as though he had not heard of this at all." Mr. Ford has long made clear his opposition to busing. In an earlier stage of the Boston school desegregation matter, in October 1974, he said that he did not think that the initial, limited busing order of Federal District Judge W. Arthur Garri- ty Jr. was the best solution to Boston's school segregation problems, and added, "I re- spectfully disagree with the judge's order."

However, the Supreme Court decided unanimously in 1971 that Federal District judges had broad authority to order busing where necessary to eliminate the effects of unlawful school segregation. The policy of the Justice Department has for some years been to encourage school desegregation efforts. At today's briefing, Mr. Nes- sen said little of the rationale behind the President's decision to ask the Court to rethink the trend of its school desegrega- tion rulings. The press secre- tary simply said, when asked about the Boston case, that Mr. Ford had asked Mr. Levi and F. David Mathews, Secretary of Health, Education and Wel- fare, to recommend possible al- ternatives to busing and that the President had met with them several times on the sub- ject.

At one of these meetings, Mr. Nessen said, "The President asked the Attorney General to look for an appropriate and proper case to ask the Court to re-examine busing as a remedy, and to explore alternative solutions that would be less destructive of the fabric of our community life." Mr. Nessen, who said he did not know when this occurred, said the President's statement was "a policy directive" to Mr. Levi. Interviews with various per- sons indicated that the original plan within the Justice Depart- ment had been to file a brief last week with the Court siding with Boston's antibusing groups and asking for a reconsidera- tion of the Court's 1971 ruling. The plan changed, however, for a variety of reasons, in- cluding the immediate strong opposition of J. Stanley Pot- tinger, the head of the depart- ment's civil rights division, and the subsequent opposition of Senator Brooke and others as news of the plan spread. Mr. Pottinger's position is also supported by Deputy At- torney General Harold R. Tyler Jr., according to several sources. The meetings Mr. Levi held today, with Mr. Bork and Mr. Pottinger attending each, were basically presentations of ar- guments by each side.

He was believed to have been a drowning victim. Kentucky Official in Case LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 18 (UPI)—Jefferson County Judge Todd Hollenbach announced to- day that he would file a brief in United States Supreme Court seeking to enter the Boston desegregation case. Judge Hollenbach, the county's chief executive officer, said he was taking the action be- cause of a "great similarity of issues—both in fact and law—between the court-ordered bus- ing in effect in Boston and in Jefferson County. He also said he would tele- phone Attorney General Edward H. Levi, urging him to enter the Boston case.

of Projected Nuclear Utility Press Interior Agency to File Suit to Protect the Indiana Dunes

JAM E. FARRELL
The New York Times
May 18—A munitions, environmental and public interest group here are putting the Interior to action to protect the ecology of the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore.

busy city, which dominates a heavily industrialized corridor along Lake Michigan. The park offers a tranquil liaison with nature for many thousands of working-class people whose lives are dominated by factories and steel mills.

The four-year-old dispute revolves around the plans of a utility, the Northern Indiana Public Service Company, to build a nuclear power plant on land it owns that abuts on the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore.

After two years of hearings, the Atomic Energy Commission, now called the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, granted the utility a license to construct the plant. Those in opposition, including an active Chicago group called Businessmen for the Public Interest, took the case to Federal district court.

Reached Supreme Court
The case, which contended that the A.E.C. had violated its own regulations in issuing the license, eventually reached the United States Supreme Court, which sent it back to local Federal courts. Last month, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit refused to revoke the utility's construction permit.

In effect, the opponents of the nuclear power plant had all but exhausted their judicial courses—although the Department of the Interior has not.

The Court of Appeals decision noted that the Interior Department had not been involved in the complex litigation involving the 8,300-acre dunes park.

The decision said that "even assuming the Department of Interior, by exercising its statutory power of supervision over the National Lakeshore—could obtain injunctive relief against threatened irreparable injury to lands within its custody from sources outside, we could not justify interruption of the A.E.C. licensing process when the department has not sought such relief."

Congressmen Urged to Act
Opponents of the nuclear plant have interpreted this as a positive sign from the court and have been urging the Interior Department to bring suit to halt the construction.

They have also enlisted the aid of some leading politicians in the area including Illinois' two Senator, Adlai E. Stevenson 3d, a Democrat, and Charles H. Percy, a Republican, as well as Representative Sidney R. Yates, an Illinois Democrat who is chairman of the subcommittee responsible for the Interior Department's appropriations.

A perusal of some of the documents from the many hearings involved in the case over the last few years shows that the Department of Interior has been opposed to the construction of the plant from the beginning. But no satisfactory reason has been offered as to why the department never became a litigant once the A.E.C. license was approved and the case went to court.

On Oct. 10, 1972, Burton H. Atwood, then the Secretary of the Interior's field representative, told the A.E.C. that the dunes park would suffer permanent esthetic and ecological damage if the plant was built.

"We do not believe it is necessary to degrade an area which Congress has set aside to provide a place where refugees from the wasteland of our cities can take their children to escape the dullness of ordinary lives," Mr. Atwood said. The plant, he added, was "appalling to contemplate."

Minority Medical Students Upheld Against Criticism

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN

Harvard University officials, groups that were formerly sharply criticized yesterday a Harvard Medical School professor who had charged that the academic standards in the nation's medical schools have dropped in recent years because of the admission of many minority group students with substandard academic qualifications.

The reactions from the President of Harvard and the dean of its medical school were part of widespread criticism stirred by an article by Dr. Edward D. Davis in the current issue of The New England Journal of Medicine.

Dr. Davis is a professor of bacterial physiology. His article, "Academic Standards in Medical Schools," appeared in the "Sounding Board" section of what many doctors consider the most eminent medical journal in this country.

Derek C. Bok, president of Harvard, said in a statement issued yesterday that he could "find no basis for any implication that minority students are less than fully qualified for the M.D. degree in accordance with the normal standards of Harvard Medical School."

Dr. Robert H. Ebert, dean of Harvard Medical School, termed Dr. Davis's action as "irresponsible." Dr. Ebert contended that Harvard Medical School standards were "as high as they have ever been—perhaps higher."

Dr. Ebert also said Dr. Davis's "general implications about the professional acumen of all minority students" was irresponsible.

Dr. Davis stressed in a telephone interview that he was not talking about all minority group students, some of whom are at the top of their classes, but that he was "raising questions about small fraction."

In his article, Dr. Davis said: "Medical faculties can derive deep satisfaction from their success in recruiting and helping many able students from cluded. But it has also become apparent that patience and sympathy cannot overcome the inability of some students to handle the material."

Dr. Davis also said: "It would be a rare person today who would question the value of stretching the criteria for admission, and of trying to make up for earlier educational disadvantages, to help disadvantaged groups. But how far faculties should stretch the criteria for passing students is another matter."

Other medical educators have said privately that they believed academic standards as measured by test scores have dropped but that they accepted such a change to help correct social injustice.

These and many other medical educators question the correlation between test score results and a doctor's performance as a physician.

The dispute over the relevancy of tests comes at a time when consumer interest groups are urging that doctors face mandatory recertification on the basis of examinations.

In a separate statement, Dr. John A. D. Cooper, president of the Association of American Medical Colleges in Washington, disputed as "not true" the purported decline of academic standards. Dr. Cooper said that more students were entering medical schools with higher test score results.

"Faculties have recognized that there are many factors other than grades and scores that determine whether an applicant will become a good physician," Dr. Cooper said, adding, "This has led to broadening the criteria used in selecting students."

Longtime Appeals Judge Loses To Newcomer in Alabama Vote

Special to The New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 9 - The vulnerability of elected state judges was demonstrated last week when a virtually unknown assistant state attorney general defeated a veteran Appellate Court judge who was accused during the campaign of dealing too leniently with criminals.

In what was regarded as a major upset Assistant State Attorney General William Bowen, 28 years old, defeated Judge Aubrey M. Cates Jr., 67, by 30,000 votes.

It was the first time in 50 years that a sitting elected appellate judge had been defeated in Alabama. Until this year, there had been a tacit understanding within the legal profession that once a judge was elected, he was to enjoy the security of facing no opposition in future races.

A major factor in Judge Cates' defeat was the campaign waged by Mr. Bowen's superior, Attorney General William J. Baxley, who maintained that Judge Cates had not been fair toward the state in his decisions on cases before the Alabama Court of Criminal Appeals.

In a statewide telecast, a few days before the election, which Mr. Baxley said he paid for "out of my own pocket," he maintained that Judge Cates had a record of reversing an extraordinary number of cases.

Judge Cates denied this, and pointed out that his decisions had to have the concurrence of at least two other members of the five-man court.

Mr. Baxley said Judge Cates was preoccupied with "nit-picking technicalities" in the law and charged that he had once reversed the conviction of a man accused of cutting a small girl's throat and leaving her for dead.

As Attorney General, Mr. Baxley has followed the unusual policy of personally taking part in many criminal prosecutions. Some of the convictions he has obtained in those cases have been overturned upon appeals.

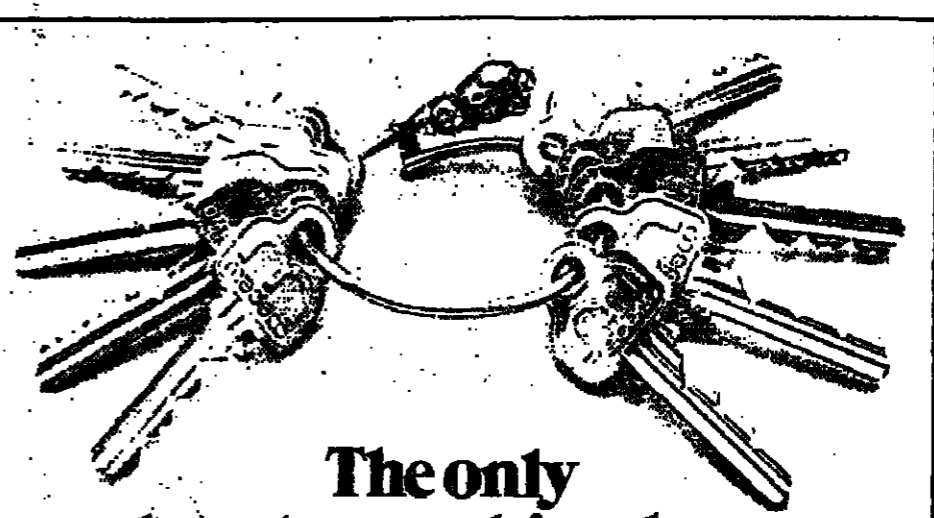

Several district attorneys appeared with Mr. Baxley on the television program.

Most bar groups passively supported Judge Cates, and one group of lawyers in Birmingham, who had served as prosecutors in the past, organized support for the incumbent judge. One of the organizers, Al Bowen of Birmingham, a few days before the election called Mr. Baxley's action "the most flagrant and dangerous abuse of political power I have witnessed: if he is successful, he will have a stranglehold on all the judges."

Responding to this and press criticism after the election, Mr. Baxley, who is considered a certain candidate for Governor of Alabama in 1978, acknowledged that the race has "hurt me politically" and said, "I don't think I will ever again get involved in this type of race."

Judge Cates, the only Rhodes scholar ever to serve on the Alabama Appellate bench, was first elected in 1954.

NAVAJOS PROTEST TRIBE'S FUND USE

Over 600 Gather at Arizona Council Meeting to Score Alleged Corruption

By GRACE LICHTENSTEIN
Special to The New York Times

WINDOW ROCK, Ariz., May 18 — More than 600 persons from all over the 25,000-square-mile Navajo Indian reservation gathered peacefully here in the tribal capital today to protest alleged corruption in the tribal government.

The demonstration came after months of rumors and after disclosures of a Federal grand jury investigation that has already resulted in four indictments against tribal officials.

Peter MacDonald, the tribal chairman, has denounced the protesters as a "vigilante group" seeking to discredit the tribe's strivings toward more independence from the Federal authorities.

About 350 demonstrators marched through Window Rock to the building where the tribal council had just opened its spring meeting this morning. Three hundred more waited outside the building listening to the council meeting on loudspeakers.

The protesters carried signs with such slogans as "Peter MacDonald" and "MacDonald is sold the white man and forgets the Navajo people." A delegation of about 50 of them was allowed into the meeting, where it presented a series of demands.

These included the establishment of a "Watergate-style" committee to look into charges of kickbacks and conflicts of interest involving millions of dollars in Federal and tribal funds. The protesters also called for a reorganization of the entire tribal government structure, a moratorium on further leasing of the tribe's natural resources and the cancellation of a lease El Paso Natural Gas holds for coal strip-mining.

The council is expected to take up these matters in the next few weeks.

The dissidents were led by a diverse group of activists including Peterson Zah, the head of the largest legal aid program on the reservation, and the Rev. Lorenzo Martin, a Navajo Roman Catholic priest. They are supported by a number of tribal councilmen who are political opponents of Mr. MacDonald.

One of the most prominent is Annie Wauneka, who was recently honored as a "Woman of the Year" on a nationally televised award show.

In an interview she charged that the council has kept in the dark about alleged mismanagement and misuse of funds earmarked for reservation education, housing and employment programs. The protest march, she said, "is the only way to make the leaders listen."

Protesters have complained that they cannot get an accurate accounting of the tribe's cash reserve fund. They are also upset by such expenditures as the $300,000 a year paid to the tribe's legal counsel, George Vlassis, and $700,000 invested by the tribe in a fleet of small airplanes. Some councilmen fear that the tribe is on the verge of bankruptcy.

Recently, it was charged that an independent housing authority set up by the tribe to spend $13 million in funds from the Federal Department of Housing and Urban Development had been improperly handed over to a Los Angeles mortgage investment company.

The Navajo Housing Authority sued in an attempt to get back nearly $5 million of that money. Three tribal officers, including the president of the housing authority, reportedly received checks of up to $50,000 from the Los Angeles company as personal loans, but the checks were said to have bounced. The housing authority president has since resigned.

Catholic Drive Falls Short

NEWARK, May 18 (UPI)—The Archdiocese of Newark says it fell $2.4 million short of its $5 million goal in its "lifetime 76" fund-raising drive to support Roman Catholic charities and social services. The archdiocese said the drive ended Sunday with $2.5 million in collections, well below the $5.8 million raised last year.

Ex-Reporter Denies That She Gave F.B.I. Information About Nashville Paper or Its Staff

By JOHN M. CREWDSON
Special to The New York Times

NASHVILLE, May 18—Amid reports of concern that she may have acted as a double agent for the Soviet Union, Jaquie Srouji, who enjoyed "a special relationship" with the Federal Bureau of Investigation when she was a newspaper reporter here, denied today that she had ever provided the F.B.I. with information about the Nashville Tennessean or members of its staff.

Mrs. Srouji, a former copy editor and feature writer, was discharged on May 5 by John Seigenthaler, The Tennessean's publisher, after Mr. Seigenthaler said, she advised him that she had had what he termed "communications" with the F.B.I. regarding two Tennessee spies.

Mr. Seigenthaler declined to name the two, but other sources identified them as Dolph Honicker, a news editor who has expressed opposition to the nuclear energy industry, and Jerry Hornsby, a copy editor who until last year was a member of the Socialist Party U.S.A.

Federal sources have expressed concern about Mrs. Srouji's recent relationship with a Soviet diplomat in Washington who is said to be a member of his country's intelligence service, especially in view of the assertion by Mr. Seigenthaler that she had shown him a number of classified F.B.I. documents, including one so sensitive that he refused to characterize it.

That assertion, coupled with the publisher's criticism of the bureau and his reporting of some of Mrs. Srouji's alleged statements to him about her relationship with the F.B.I., was followed by private suggestions from bureau sources that some of Mr. Seigenthaler's activities could not withstand scrutiny.

In a statement issued today, Mr. Seigenthaler said that he was "shocked to learn that such suggestions had been made, and that he intended to

New Soviet Dissident Group Protests Sentence of Tatar

MOSCOW, May 18 (AP)—A new committee formed by Soviet campaigners for human rights issued its first accusations against the Soviet Government today and said it would pass them on to foreign embassies.

The charges, by the Committee for Cooperation in the Observance of the Helsinki Agreements in the U.S.S.R., dealt with the sentencing in Omsk last month of a Crimean Tatar, Mustafa Dzhemilev, to two and a half years in a labor camp for anti-Soviet agitation. The charges were made at a news conference by Andrei D. Sakharov, the dissident physicist, at his Moscow apartment.

The committee said the sentencing was in violation of "the spirit and letter" of the 1975 Helsinki declaration's sections on free expression.

Identical Twins Named School's Salutatorians

ALBANY, May 18 (AP)—Identical twins, Joe and Bill Herkenbater, not only look alike but also have been named co-salutatorians of their high school graduating class at Vincentian Institute here.

The twins, 18 years old, who have shared the same high school average for the last two years, topped 196 other seniors with an identical final-year average of 95.15 out of a possible 100.

Joe and Bill, who both plan to begin studying engineering at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy this fall, say they never really knew what each other's academic averages were until the end of the year.

Do they compete with each other? "Sure, there is competition, but not the kind like 'Ah, there I beat you,'" said Joe. "It's just fun."

ask the F.B.I. for an explanation.

In his statement, Mr. Seigenthaler said:

"It was shocking to me to learn that on last Thursday, while I was in the Justice Department building in Washington filing a complaint against the F.B.I., the deputy assistant director of that agency, Mr. Homer Boynton, was seeking to press information that I was not a decent member of society."

"I plan to file today the strongest possible complaint against Mr. Boynton with Mr. Michael Shaheen, counsel for the Office of Professional Responsibility for the Department of Justice. I will expect Mr. Shaheen to report Mr. Boynton's activities to both the Attorney General and F.B.I. Director Kelley."

"The circumstances surrounding this outrageous conduct are of grave concern to me. I am aware that during a period of several days ago, when I was publicly quoted as criticizing F.B.I. actions in its relationship with a former member of this newspaper's staff, there was an exchange of communications between F.B.I. offices in Washington and Tennessee in which my personal character was demeaned, and the political interests of other Tennessee staff members were mentioned."

"I hope to meet Mr. Boynton face-to-face for an explanation of his conduct."

Mrs. Srouji appeared at a news conference after taking her air fare to Washington to attend a conference for Students for a Democratic Society.

Mr. Seigenthaler said that she told him recently that she had filed a 50-page report on the meeting with the bureau.

F.B.I. sources indicated that whatever arrangements existed between the bureau and Mrs. Srouji had been made in its national field office and not at F.B.I. headquarters in Washington. Larry Olsen, the agent who served as her contact in the 1960's, is now under investigation by the F.B.I. in connection with hundreds of pages of confidential bureau documents on nuclear power and other matters allegedly obtained by Mrs. Srouji.

The New York Times reported last week that before her departure from the Tennesseean, Mrs. Srouji met with Sergei F. Zaitsev, a Second Secretary of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, in connection with a book that she was preparing on nuclear power.

Mrs. Srouji said today that she had approached Mr. Zaitsev, who was introduced to her as a nuclear physicist, on her own initiative, and not at the behest of the F.B.I., and that she had met with him "on several occasions" while he "helped me with the technical aspects" of her book.

Her only discussion with the F.B.I. about that relationship, she said, came when two F.B.I. agents sought to determine the reason for her initial visit to the Soviet Embassy.

Intelligence sources have identified Mr. Zaitsev as a colonel in the K.G.B., the Soviet intelligence service, and said that Mrs. Srouji herself as an F.B.I. informant and said, "The F.B.I. has never paid me anything for any information." Mr. Seigenthaler said that she told him recently that she had filed a 50-page report on the meeting with the bureau.

F.B.I. sources indicated that whatever arrangements existed between the bureau and Mrs. Srouji had been made in its national field office and not at F.B.I. headquarters in Washington.

Larry Olsen, the agent who served as her contact in the 1960's, is now under investigation by the F.B.I. in connection with hundreds of pages of confidential bureau documents on nuclear power and other matters allegedly obtained by Mrs. Srouji.

The New York Times reported last week that before her departure from the Tennesseean, Mrs. Srouji met with Sergei F. Zaitsev, a Second Secretary of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, in connection with a book that she was preparing on nuclear power.

Mrs. Srouji said today that she had approached Mr. Zaitsev, who was introduced to her as a nuclear physicist, on her own initiative, and not at the behest of the F.B.I., and that she had met with him "on several occasions" while he "helped me with the technical aspects" of her book.

Her only discussion with the F.B.I. about that relationship, she said, came when two F.B.I. agents sought to determine the reason for her initial visit to the Soviet Embassy.

Intelligence sources have identified Mr. Zaitsev as a colonel in the K.G.B., the Soviet intelligence service, and said that Mrs. Srouji herself as an F.B.I. informant and said, "The F.B.I. has never paid me anything for any information." She did concede, however, that while she was working as a reporter for The Nashville Banner

F.B.I. sources said that Mr. Seigenthaler and The Tennesseean were themselves "not engaged in any grand jury investigation, and it's not all anti-F.B.I. accusations against him."

Mr. Seigenthaler said today that he had received information from Mrs. Srouji that she had a "special relationship" with the F.B.I. when she was a newspaper reporter here, denied today that she had ever provided the F.B.I. with information about the Nashville Tennessean or members of its staff.

Mrs. Srouji, a former copy editor and feature writer, was discharged on May 5 by John Seigenthaler, The Tennessean's publisher, after Mr. Seigenthaler said, she advised him that she had had what he termed "communications" with the F.B.I. regarding two Tennessee spies.

Mr. Seigenthaler declined to name the two, but other sources identified them as Dolph Honicker, a news editor who has expressed opposition to the nuclear energy industry, and Jerry Hornsby, a copy editor who until last year was a member of the Socialist Party U.S.A.

Federal sources have expressed concern about Mrs. Srouji's recent relationship with a Soviet diplomat in Washington who is said to be a member of his country's intelligence service, especially in view of the assertion by Mr. Seigenthaler that she had shown him a number of classified F.B.I. documents, including one so sensitive that he refused to characterize it.

That assertion, coupled with the publisher's criticism of the bureau and his reporting of some of Mrs. Srouji's alleged statements to him about her relationship with the F.B.I., was followed by private suggestions from bureau sources that some of Mr. Seigenthaler's activities could not withstand scrutiny.

To Ask Explanation

In a statement issued today, Mr. Seigenthaler said that he was "shocked to learn that such suggestions had been made, and that he intended to

New Soviet Dissident Group Protests Sentence of Tatar

MOSCOW, May 18 (AP)—A new committee formed by Soviet campaigners for human rights issued its first accusations against the Soviet Government today and said it would pass them on to foreign embassies.

The charges, by the Committee for Cooperation in the Observance of the Helsinki Agreements in the U.S.S.R., dealt with the sentencing in Omsk last month of a Crimean Tatar, Mustafa Dzhemilev, to two and a half years in a labor camp for anti-Soviet agitation. The charges were made at a news conference by Andrei D. Sakharov, the dissident physicist, at his Moscow apartment.

The committee said the sentencing was in violation of "the spirit and letter" of the 1975 Helsinki declaration's sections on free expression.

Identical Twins Named School's Salutatorians

ALBANY, May 18 (AP)—Identical twins, Joe and Bill Herkenbater, not only look alike but also have been named co-salutatorians of their high school graduating class at Vincentian Institute here.

The twins, 18 years old, who have shared the same high school average for the last two years, topped 196 other seniors with an identical final-year average of 95.15 out of a possible 100.

Joe and Bill, who both plan to begin studying engineering at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy this fall, say they never really knew what each other's academic averages were until the end of the year.

Previous exhibits at the West 67th St. cafe have included landscapes by Louis Nizer, the lawyer-author; portraits by Maria Cooper Janis, daughter of the late Gary Cooper and wife of Byron Janis, the pianist; and caricatures by Harold C. Schonberg, music critic of The New York Times. Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson came to New York Monday for conferences on his soon-to-be-published book and to sit for the fourth time for his official Cabinet portrait by Everett Raymond Kinstler. This session was in Mr. Kinstler's duplex studio at the National Arts Club on Gramercy Park South. Breaking with the tradition of posthumous portraits from photographs, Mr. Kinstler set a record of painting from life more than 20 top Federal officials—including 16 Cabinet members, dating back to the Kennedy Administration. His portrait of John B. Connally was completed in March and works-in-progress include those of Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, Roger C. B. Morton, former Secretary of Commerce, whose appointments are expected to be catch-as-catch-can while he serves as President Ford's campaign manager, and Attorney General Edward H. Levi. Mr. Richardson, a self-described "incurable doodler," whose caricatures are prized in Washington, did one of Mr. Kinstler in feline on his London Embassy stationery while sitting for him on a trip home last year. It hangs on the studio wall. As Mr. Richardson looked again at the caricature Monday evening, Mr. Kinstler—whose portraits cost the Government "four figures but nowhere near five" said to his guest, "you know, I think I'm really a lot better artist than you are." The Secretary observed, "I should hope so."

CUNNINGHAM TOLD TO PROVIDE DATA

Judge Orders Him to Give Jurors Law-Firm Records By TOM GOLDSTEIN Patrick J. Cunningham, the Democratic state chairman, was ordered yesterday to turn over the business and bank records of his law firm to a special grand jury impaneled by Maurice H. Nadjari, the special state prosecutor. The order, by Justice Leonard H. Sandler of State Supreme Court, came after Mr. Cunningham's law partner had charged that Mr. Nadjari had "abused, threatened and harassed" the law firm's clients in an effort to obtain evidence against Mr. Cunningham. Records of law firms are part of a cluster of documents subpoenaed last January by a special grand jury in connection with an investigation by Mr. Nadjari into the possible sale of judgeships in the Bronx. In denying a motion to quash subpoenas for the Cunningham firm's records, Justice Sandler said there was "an appropriate legal basis for the production of the records" without ruling on the merits of the charges made by Joseph S. Kaming, Mr. Cunningham's partner. These charges were denied by Joel Cohen and Christopher Sullivan, two assistants in the Nadjari office. "The question is whether if these allegations were proved to be true it would alter the good-faith nature of the subpoenas," Justice Sandler said. "I'm inclined to think it would not." In effect the justice, who presides over Mr. Nadjari's cases

Peterson and Train Back New Rules on Strip Mining

WASHINGTON, May 18 (UPI)—The Administration's top environmental protection officers reaffirmed their support today for new regulations, issued by the Interior Department, to control strip mining on Federal land. "These regulations establish acceptable standards for protecting those lands overlying Federal coal and do not allow vast strip mining," Russell W. Peterson, chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality, and Russell E. Train, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, wrote in a letter to The Washington Post. They said that their agencies "believe these regulations are environmentally acceptable, compatible with sound energy development and worthy of broad support." Mr. Train and Mr. Peterson responded to news articles that said the new regulations would allow "vast strip mining" on Federal lands in the West. In January, a special grand jury also subpoenaed some corporate records of Mr. Cunningham—who is also the Bronx party leader—bank records of the party leader and his wife, and records of the Bronx County Democratic committee. Mr. Cunningham had at first refused to have these records turned over to Mr. Nadjari, but he agreed to do so two weeks ago after the Appellate Division ordered him to. A spokesman for Mr. Nadjari said yesterday that most of the records had arrived. Mr. Cunningham has not personally testified before the grand jury.

Officials said that as many as nine persons might have died in Truk, in the Caroline, where Typhoon Pamela, with winds in excess of 100 miles an hour, triggered a mudslide that buried a building. Westchester School District Giving Principals' Roles to Teams

By DAVID VIDAL

A Westchester County school district that has been partly run without principals for one year is formally proposing the elimination of that traditional position and the transfer of its duties to teachers, called leaders, who function in teams.

The teachers get extra pay for their new chores. But Dr. Clayton L. Akin, superintendent of the Rye Neck Union Free School District, says the 10-principal plan would still contribute most of the $30,000 in savings he envisions for next year's budget, which has been about $4 million for several years.

"I guess what I am really saying is that a principalship is a series of functions and not necessarily a person," Dr. Akin said. "And there are so many of these functions that no one person can do it."

partly in the city of Rye and partly in the village of Mamaroneck, has a history of financial trouble.

The plan, whose implementation depends on the approval of the State Education Department, seeks to improve efficiency while allowing teachers a greater role in decision-making.

"The least administration there is, the better," said Irene Willis, an English teacher who is a "team leader" in the high school. "It involves much more work. But you are trading off a greater work load for the satisfaction of being in control of your own situation."

The Rye Neck district is small, which is one of the reasons given by several team leaders who say the no-principal concept actually works and should be continued.

The district has 1,554 pupils, a professional staff of 105, two elementary schools and a combined middle and high school. Under the old arrangement, there were principals at the middle and high schools, while a third principal handled both elementary schools.

The new plan calls for the closing of one elementary school, for economy reasons, and the transfer of the elementary school principal to a new position as assistant school superintendent for instruction and curriculum planning. In addition, the size of elementary classes would rise from 23 to 27 pupils.

At the middle school, the system of team leaders has been in effect for more than one year, since the principal there left and was not replaced. The position of a high school principal currently on leave of absence would be abolished and he would become the only person to actually lose a position under the plan.

The daily operation of the district would then become the responsibility of the superintendent and his assistant with the aid of 20 teacher-leaders. The eight departmental leaders in the high school teach full time, while the four team leaders in the middle school teach four-fifths of their time. Five grade-level leaders would be in charge of the elementary school while three coordinating teachers would help with district-wide curriculum planning.

Efforts of the Rye Neck spreading the costs by merger district to increase its revenues by imposing tuition, or spreading the costs by merger with neighboring districts had been blocked by the voters and neighbors. An insufficient tax base in the hybrid district had also made it impossible to levy more taxes.

Besides saving money, the new plan has additional benefits, according to Joel Seligman and Peter Mustich, team leaders in the middle school.

"There is a definite sense of responsibility because you have an unstated power," Mr. Seligman said. Mr. Mustich said the teaching staff's esprit de corps was high, "and we really feel good about the place."

Frances Bennett, the elementary school principal, feels less certain about the plan.

"If I had my choice, I would like to keep it," the 55-year-old educator said, "but the need is upon us."

The State Education Department has issued a new publication on the subject of articulation, or improving continuity of learning between high school and college. Entitled "Linking Schools and Colleges: An Inventory of School-College Articulation Practices in New York State, 1974-75," the report is a follow-up to a 1974 Regents position paper on the need for greater articulation.

INDIA AND PAKISTAN PLAN JULY ACCORD

Special to The New York Times

NEW DELHI, May 18—India and Pakistan will re-establish relations in the third week of July, Foreign Minister Y. B. Chavan announced in Parliament today.

Mr. Chavan said that diplomatic relations, which were severed during the 1971 war over Bangladesh, would be re-established between July 17 and 24 and that the severed air and land communications would also be restored "more or less simultaneously."

Members of Parliament cheered the announcement by thumping on tables.

The decision to restore relations was reached last week at a meeting of top officials of the two countries in Islamabad, the capital of Pakistan. The two nations have been frequent adversaries since partition of the subcontinent in 1947 but not until the 1971 war, which resulted in the independent Bangladesh, formerly East Pakistan, did relations deteriorate to the point of closing diplomatic missions.

Mr. Chavan said that he is confident that these "positive developments" would be welcomed not only by the people of the two countries but by the "friends of our countries in the region and world at large."

Cruise Missile Is Test

WHITE SANDS, N.M., (UPI)—An Air Force cruise missile was successfully launched yesterday from a B-52 bomber over the White Sands Range, officials said.

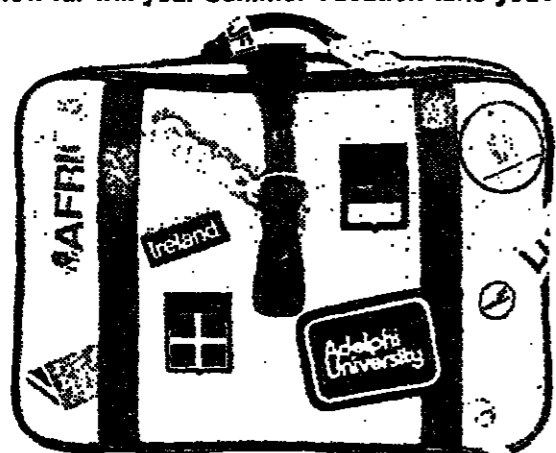

The missile, a 1,900-pound design to carry a nuclear warhead, was the second of a series of tests for the "Patriot" missile.

The purpose of the tests was to demonstrate the missile's maneuverability and performance.

'The Runner Stumbles' Marked by Fine Acting

By MEL GUSSOW

Milan Stitt's 'The Runner Stumbles' is, simultaneously, a love story about an impossible love, a psychological... study of the strictures of religion. The new drama, which... opened last night at the Little Theater, offers some sobering... judgments on the relationships of men and women whose lives are devoted to God.

The play, which is exceedingly well acted, under the precise direction of Austin Pendleton, was tried out last year at the Manhattan Theater Club, and earlier this season was produced at the Hartman Theater in Stamford, Conn. Mr. Pendleton, who has been with the production from the beginning, and Mr. Stitt have, clearly, nurtured the work onto Broadway.

Mr. Stitt draws upon fact—an actual case in Michigan in 1911 when a priest was accused of murdering a girl—and filters it through his own imagination. This is no dusty court record, but a play about people who are entrapped by their own and one another's obsessions.

Father Rivaud, forcefully acted by Stephen Joyce) is a maverick priest who has been relegated to a god-forsaken and largely non-Catholic rural section of Michigan. The arrival of Sister Rita (Cheryl Donohue), a lively and ambitious nun, upsets the precarious balance of his personal and spiritual life.

It is clear to us from their first meeting that the two are lonely longing spirits—and potential lovers—because of the devoutness of their calling, they steadfastly resist natural impulses. We see their predicament partially through the critical eyes of Father Rivaud's housekeeper (Sloane Shelton), a recent and firm convert to Catholicism. Even as the two weaken, she remains resolute.

These three tightly wound characters form the essence of the play, each yearning for—and shrinking from—too close contact. Tragedy is inevitable, although the exact nature of the crime is withheld by the author until the end of the play. We know that Sister Rita has been slain, but not until the climax of the drama do we know who killed her.

As the play begins, the priest is awaiting trial. The scene moves from cell to courtroom to mind and shadowy memory as we, and Father Rivaud's inquisitor, lawyer, try to piece together the truth. That defense attorney and other minor characters are stock figures and their scenes, as well as some of the courtroom interrogation, have a stiff, unyielding quality. In addition the staging is so simple—bare chairs and tables—the cast so small that the play loses atmosphere. Actually it might improve if expanded on film, where we could feel the oppressiveness of the narrowminded community.

Despite flaws, the play has a strong emotional impact. The writer avoids overstatement and melodrama. In Stitt's first play, Mr. Stitt has the restraint and sureness of an experienced dramatist. Led by Mr. Pendleton into giving carefully modulated performances, the cast lifts the play.

Miss Shelton is a watchful guardian; we must read much of the play on her face. Miss Donohue delicately communicates her character's suppressed passion and sensuality. With the help of her director, she has mastered the art (demonstrated by Mr. Pendleton in his own performance) of expressing, vividly, even hysterically, and then suddenly cutting it off, and retreating: a flame extinguished.

Mr. Joyce has the most difficult assignment. There are greater transitions in his character, as he jumps from openness to coldness, from self-hate to violence. "The church is for rules," he proclaims. "God is for people." Sister Rita objects, thereby defining the nature of their differences. Their fate is in his hands (and he leaves it up to God). The priest is fallible, mercurial, even quixotic, and Mr. Joyce manages all the rapid shifts in mood.

By VINCENT CANBY
Billy (Chris Mulkey) sometimes acts as if he were 14, though he's in his early 20's. Divorced from a wife he never loved, he lives in a one-room apartment, sleeps on a convertible couch, plays the radio too loud and keeps a couple of cats. He seems surprised when he calls a girl for a date at 1 o'clock in the morning and she asks him if he knows what time it is. He does but he's at loose ends.

So is Eddie (John Jenkins), a mechanic who works with Billy at a local garage. Eddie is married, more or less happily, to Jen (Linda Jenkins). They have one child and another on the way. Jen wants to move to the suburbs. Eddie doesn't. Jen wants a dog. Eddie doesn't. They regularly have furious fights, after which Eddie stalks out and joins Billy at a bar called The Club. They play pool and pinball and drink beer. Life for Billy and Eddie is a series of six-packs.

Unlike 'Goin' Down the Road,' a 1970 Canadian film that ultimately patronized the aimless lives of its two blue-collar friends, 'Loose Ends' rides along with Billy and Eddie, seeing just about what they see when they see it without imposing on them heavy sociological significance. The filmmakers let Billy and Eddie speak for themselves, and that's mostly about cars. Says Billy of a woman he's met, "She has this Caprice that's loaded with options," which is what they don't have. "Loose Ends," which opened a week's run at the Whitney Museum of American Art yesterday, is a remarkably good, level-headed movie about friendship and marriage and the limitations of each when, like Billy and Eddie, the people have never had to develop the means of conceptualizing experience. Neither Billy nor Eddie is dumb. Each is like an underdeveloped country whose highest aim is to become a consumer society. There are plenty of middle-class people with the same dimly realized ambitions.

"Loose Ends" was made on a shoestring in Minneapolis by David Burton Morris and Victoria Wozniak, who wrote, directed and produced the film. They are, I'm told, in their 20's, which is amazing in light of the exceptional discipline in avoiding both overstatement and an easy recourse to jazzy photographic and music techniques.

The performances also are extraordinarily good, especially that of Chris Mulkey as the more loose of the two friends, a guy speeding through life with a transistor radio turned on full and two cats asleep in the back seat. When Billy gets wherever he's going, he won't even recognize it.

"Loose Ends" is the most interesting regional American film I've seen in years.

a dowry for the future." Corporations, foundations, flesh-and-blood financiers, those with exquisite taste and others with the blunt yen for great occasions, vied to be first with their checks. Successful petitioners won the coveted silver tickets—quickly dubbed "Isaac Stern's silver billets"—that marked success in the race to be in that great number when the baton went up and the bows came down and the trumpet sounded bright and clear.

Carnegie Hall was celebrating its 85th anniversary, counting down to immortality. Tchaikovsky had been at the opening of what was originally called the Music Hall and then renamed to make the place sound less like a Scottish music hall and more like a monument to its original Scottish patron, Andrew Carnegie. Indeed, Tchaikovsky even took the baton for a performance of his Marche Solennelle.

Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3 was played at the inaugural and it led the program off last night. For the final number of its 85th anniversary, Carnegie Hall chose Handel's Hallelujah Chorus from the "Messiah." All the soloists—even those whose forte is instrumental, not vocal—were to join in this ultimate chorus. When the orchestra rehearsed it yesterday Mr. Bernstein—who is more accomplished at letting his fingers do the talking, let alone the singing—joined in with raucous gusto. So did Isaac Stern. Neither could suppress the sense of extraordinary excitement of presence at the re-creation.

Mr. Stern reviewed the words he would speak to the audience. "Despite the glories you are about to hear," was the opening he had in mind, prefatory to a warning against applause in the wrong places. "There will be moments that you will be lifted out of your seats by the rapture," he said with understandable exaggeration, given the grandeur of the evening and the survival of Arthur Rubinstein.

Mr. Stern, who is now 60 years old, attended his first Carnegie Hall performance, by Mischa Elman, as a boy of 8. He played there himself when he was 12. "I must be the oldest living artist to have played in Carnegie Hall," he said with understandable exaggeration, given the grandeur of the evening and the survival of Arthur Rubinstein.

A mighty fortress is this Carnegie, taken again and again by the assault of wondrous talent and audiences eager to encourage great music. Mr. Bernstein recalls his apprentice days, living in a room above the hall, earning a dollar an hour playing for dance classes. "I know every little rat's nest," he said.

Right up to the last minute, Mr. Stern was writing in changed bowings and fingerings on the new score he would use. Meanwhile, Mr. Bernstein practiced bouncing as he struggled with the yellowed, decaying leaves of the harpsichord music. Vladimir Horowitz prepared for the ordeal of his first night concert in 35 years.

RCA even lent a portable recording van to Columbia Records, which was going to rush out a two-record album to be called "Concert of the Century."

Martina Arroyo was to sing with the orchestra, but in a Dallas performance of Aida, she wrenched her back. "The Mozart is scratched," a Carnegie Hall official told the orchestra, adding a warning appropriate to unusual events: "Anything can develop at any time."

The most likely development was a second Hallelujah Chorus. The three-year target of the Carnegie Hall National Endowment Fund is $6.5 million, and after last night's concert, with all performers donating their services, there was truly cause for optimism in the highest. Schuyler G.

A Christie Paperback Brings $1.1 Million

The paperback rights to the late Dame Agatha Christie's 87th novel, "The Sleeping Car Murder," have been sold to Bantam Books Inc. for $1.1 million by Dodd, Mead & Company, which will publish the hard-cover book on Sept. 20. Dodd says this is a record price paid for prepublication rights for a hard-cover work of fiction.

"The Sleeping Car Murder," which features Jane Marple, was written in the late 1930's and was presented as a gift to Dame Agatha's husband, Sir Max Mallowan. In the opinion of Jonathan Dodd, director of subsidiary rights at Dodd, "it is unlikely that another Christie manuscript will be found."

Bantam will hold the paperback rights for 15 years, longer than usually applies in sales of this kind. The novel has been made a Literary Guild selection for November, when it will be paired with the Jane Marple mystery "The Murder at the Vicarage" as a dual offering. "The Sleeping Car Murder" is scheduled for publication by Bantam in September 1978.

Soviet Pianist Vanishes in Italy

BRESCIA, Italy, May 18 (AP)—Yuri Yegorov, a 22-year-old Soviet pianist, disappeared yesterday hours before he was scheduled to give a concert in this northern Italian city, the police reported today.

Giorgio Valentini, an officer in the political section of the Brescia police, said that Mr. Yegorov had not been in touch with any police station so far. The police said Mr. Yegorov had left his luggage and clothes in his hotel room when he went out yesterday afternoon.

Salesman Charged In Art Theft

Michael S. Foreman, a self-employed advertising salesman, was arraigned in Federal court in Manhattan yesterday on a charge of interstate transportation of a stolen Kandinsky painting valued at $100,000.

The painting, entitled "Leise Deutung" ("Soft Interpretation"), was stolen last Dec. 14 from the office of the motion-picture producer Otto Preminger at 711 Fifth Avenue. It is now in the possession of the Swiss police.

Mr. Foreman, who is 34 years old and lives at 20 Remsen Street, Brooklyn, was arrested by Margo Denney, an agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He was released in his own cognizance after his arraignment.

Freda Payne on Bill With Michael Allen At Rainbow Grill

By JOHN S. WILSON

Both Freda Payne and Michael Allen, who are singing at the Rainbow Grill, have potentially interesting talents, but each manages to obscure a good deal of that potential in the slick and superficial aspects of their performance.

Miss Payne's talent is the most obvious—an easy, richly textured voice that is particularly effective in her low-register ventures. She is also a striking looking woman who does not really have to wear a silver spangled bra and skirt to call attention to her figure. In her performance, however, she tends to press, to overplay almost every aspect—her sexiness, her emotional projection of a song such as "Feelings," even her attempts to be light and casual.

And yet out of this banality suddenly emerges a performance of "Send in the Clowns" in which she pulls everything together, using the colors of her voice very effectively, showing more understanding of the song than most singers have and projecting a polished cameo that is done with such sensitivity and control that one wonders why there is not more evidence of this in her act.

Mr. Allen does not have as interesting a voice (or as interesting a figure) but he does have some interesting ideas.

He is jaunty, bering and eager to please. But singing Jerome Kern's "They Didn't Believe Me" as though he were Al Jolson moaning "Sonny Boy" is a confusing way to display that eagerness.

He is much more effective when he achieves a marriage of Rodgers and Hammerstein and Miles Davis, singing "I Have Dreamed" in a setting of Mr. Davis's "All Blues" (miraculously, it works) or as he builds a provocative medley of torch songs around a notorch song that is in danger of being forgotten, "The Sadler but Wiser Girl," from "The Music Man."

TUSCALOOSA CALLING

ic: Violin-Piano Duo

Nam Kim and Schoenberg Again Exhibit Sparkling Virtuosity

debut in Carnegie Hall last year, Young, violinist, and Paul, pianist, were a duo with an un-single-minded approach to music. Everything they did in their return to the same hall on night confirmed this artist seemed down to the smallest detail what the going to do. They each other in style, and rhythmic enformance, the music was, for a change, perfectly easy to understand.

Ives's Second Sonata fared equally well. The picturesque vigor of this bit of Americana, couched in a modernist idiom, was ideally suited to the duo's feeling for strong colors and intense lyricism.

Schubert's Sonata in G minor (Op. 137, No. 2) and Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata were strong, brisk and vibrant in the playing. This was fine as far as it served the music. In the Schubert, Mr. Kim's viola-like tone in the slow movement was particularly engaging, as were the different tonal colors he used for the Minuet. But it was not the relaxed performance one would have liked, and the "Kreutzer" Sonata was worked out in a too narrow dynamic range, for all the playing's virtues.

Paris Is Sending Vitalized Opera For a Fall Visit

By JOHN ROCKWELL

Rolf Liebermann, who directs the Paris Opéra, was in town the other day, making last-minute preparations for the American visit of that once-again-illustrious ensemble. The company will appear from Sept. 8 through 18 at the Metropolitan Opera House, and then journey to Washington's John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts for a Sept. 20-Oct. 3 engagement.

Mr. Liebermann is a bluff, commanding man of 65 years, who radiates the authority accrued from his years of power on the international opera circuit. Born in Switzerland, he has been a composer of some distinction, and headed the Hamburg Opera before he took over Paris in 1973.

During his Hamburg years, Mr. Liebermann was renowned for the extent of contemporary operas—many of them commissioned—that he performed. In Paris, most of his attention so far has been on standard repertory, and the three productions he is bringing to the United States are all familiar works—"Le Nozze di Figaro," "Otello" and "Faust" (There will be, in addition, concert performances of the Berlioz Requiem and "Damas de Sinde" in Washington.) That conservatism has aroused the displeasure of some opera buffs here, but Mr. Liebermann has his reasons.

"When I came to Hamburg," he recalled, "I inherited about 40 operas of the repertory from my predecessor, Günther Rennert [who now heads the Bavarian Opera in Munich]. That became the basis of my season, and I could immediately do new things. In Paris, I had to start with the standard works. I've begun now with commissions, though, with [Henri] Dutilleul, and then in 1979, will be the world premiere of the first opera by [Olivier] Messiaen.

A New 'Gimmick'

"When Hamburg came here in 1967 we did only 20th-century works, and so for this tour I wanted to find another gimmick. This time I will bring three productions—and the accent is on the word 'production'—which reconsider world-famous repertoire pieces with the eyes of today. These three are completely unconventional, completely out of the normal way of presenting them."

The productions in question are a "Faust" by Jorg Lavelli, with modernistic sets by Max Biggens; an "Otello" by Terry Hands, whose staging of "Henry V" with the Royal Shakespeare Company just closed here and a "Figaro" by Giorgio Strehler, the noted Italian director, that reportedly stresses the revolutionary aspects of the Beaumarchais-inspired libretto more than usual.

When Mr. Liebermann accepted the Paris appointment, it was with the understanding he would receive lavish subsidies and that a century of antiquated censoring internal regulations would be swept aside. Now, although his success has been apparent to all those who have heard opera in Paris, Mr. Liebermann admits much remains to be done.

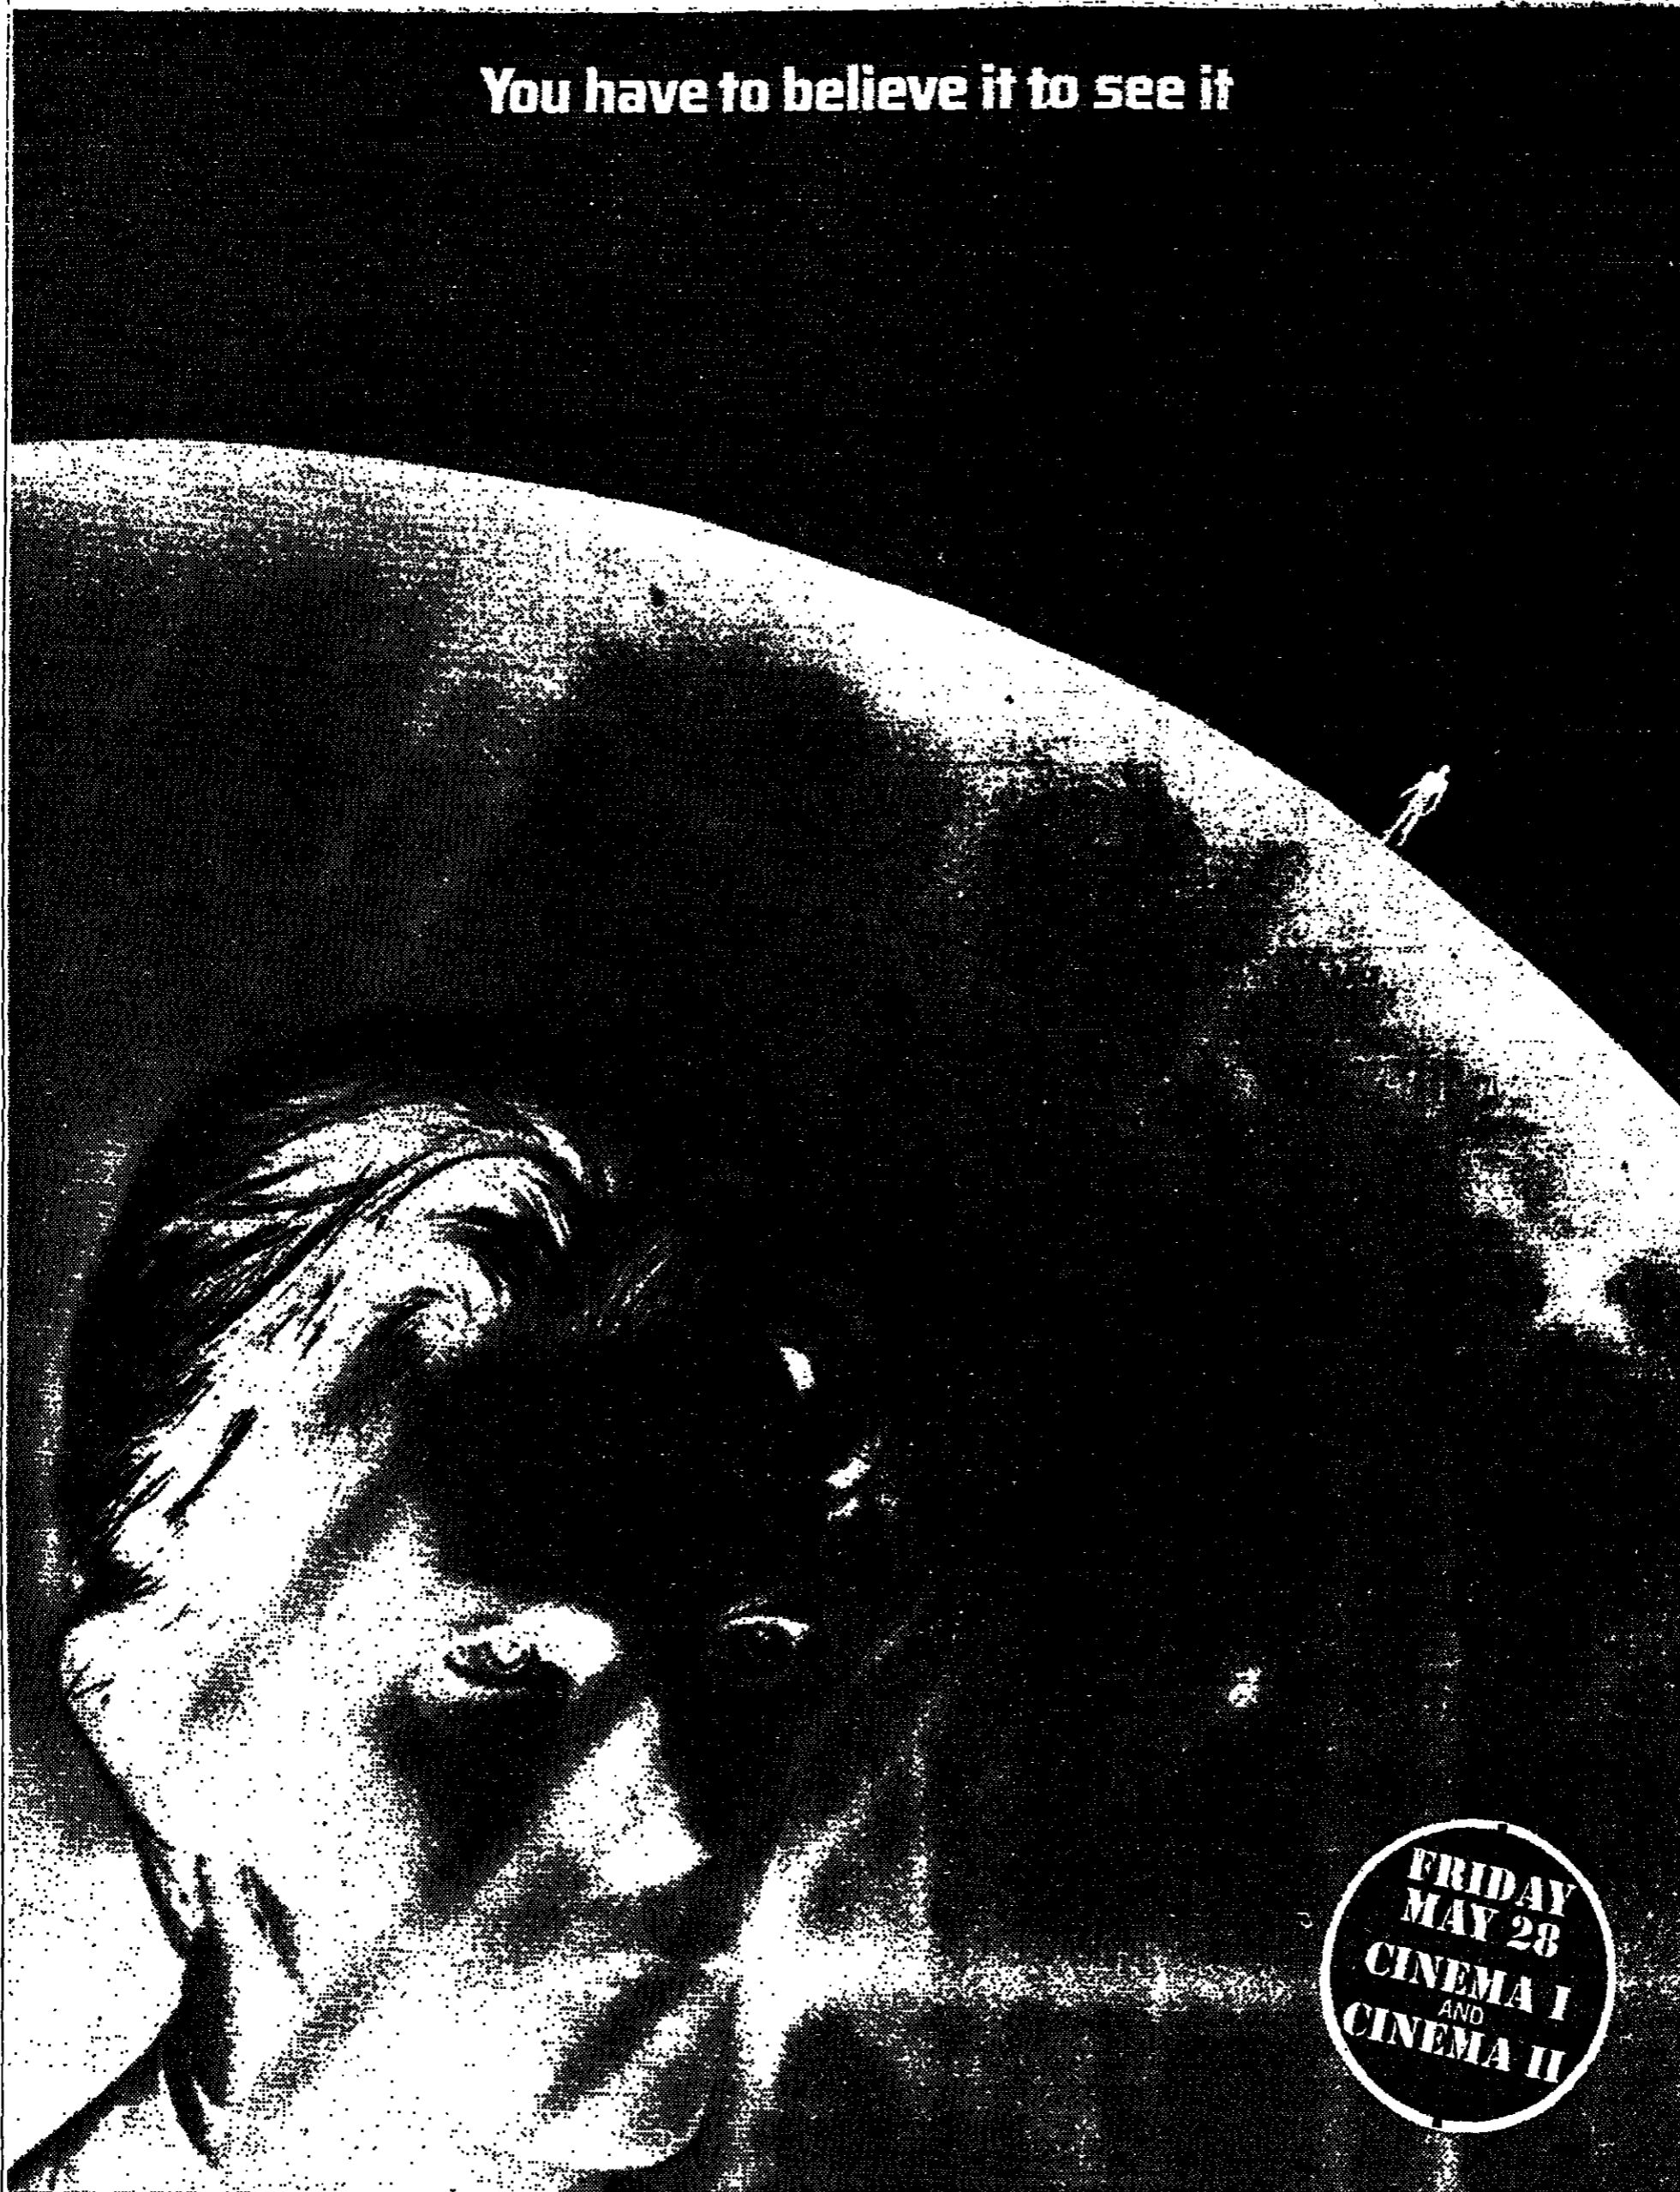

"The ballet is still a problem," he says. "And I hope they close down the house again when I leave, because they have to redo the stage which is 100 years old and hasn't been improved since. I still have no rehearsal hall. And I'd like to reopen the Opéra Comique. It's supposed to be an opera workshop now, but one hasn't heard much about this opera workshop recently. We'll be doing Plafé [by Rameau] and "Le Comte d'Ory" [by Rossini] there next season—all French works."

Even without the Comique, the Paris Opéra is a mammoth operation—225 performances a year, six nights a week for 11 months, 115 of opera and 110 of ballet, all with an annual federal subsidy of 96 million francs or more than $19 million. Mr. Liebermann had originally planned to retire this year, but now he has extended his contract until 1980.

"It's not the public. Of course, there were some chauvinist attacks from the right about a foreigner as director of the Paris Opéra. But this was over after a year. If the public follows you and the house is sold out every night, those attacks don't have to be answered at all. "The real need is to get the confidence of the personnel in the house itself, some 2,000 people. You have to be the patron—that's not just the boss, there's something paternal about it. After two years of preparation, I have the feeling that the task is not accomplished. We have to finish what has been started. I think the house could not stand now."

"But by 1980," he continued, "I really have had enough. Then it will be finished—an era. I have already planned my last season—a big French climax. First "Les Troyens" with Colin Davis and Götz Friedrich, then "Carmen" and, to finish, the Messiaen. And then I think the moment has come."

Mets Call Up Outfielder

By JOSEPH DURSO
The "battle for first place" between the New York Mets and Philadelphia Phillies was rained out last night in Shea Stadium after one inning of sniping and 1 hour 27 minutes of waiting in heavy weather.

But the Mets, girding for their future battles, kept busy making a series of maneuvers in their ranks as follows: they returned Mike Vail to Florida for more training after new X-rays showed that his dislocated right ankle was healing. They called up an outfielder named Leon Brown from their Tidewater farm club in Virginia. And they sent John Stearns down to the farm at his own request because, the 24-year-old catcher said, "at this point in my career, I have to be playing."

All the weather and all the maneuvering still left the Mets 2½ games behind the Phillies in the National League East. When the rain interrupted them last night, the visitors held a 2-1 lead with Jim Kaat pitching against Jerry Rookman and Philadelphia leading 2-0 in the top of the second inning. Nearly an hour and a half later, the umpires called it quits, the statistics were wiped out of the record books and the teams were sent home until this evening.

Instant Hero

The Mets, who lost three of four games against the Cincinnati Reds on the road over the weekend, began their day of skirmishing by taking another medical look at Vail. He is the 24-year-old outfielder who became an instant hero last September when he arrived from the minor leagues, batted .302 in one hot month and thereby emboldened them to trade Rusty Staub to the Detroit Tigers.

Then on Feb. 15, just before spring training, Vail was taking a jump shot in a basketball game and severely dislocated his right ankle. Since then, he has stayed behind in St. Petersburg, rather than trying to return to his strength. The outlook was that he would miss half the season, leaving the Mets short of outfielders.

A Rare Request

"Mike is much improved," said Dr. James Parkes, the team surgeon, after the young outfielder flew North for more X-rays yesterday. "He is now playing approximately five innings a game well in Florida. The X-rays revealed that everything has healed satisfactorily. We are returning him to Florida so that he can complete his rehabilitation. The prognosis is good, but the only element that is difficult to predict is time."

Vail, who watched the rain-soaked inning from the press box, said that "realistically, I might be back by the end of June." But he added, also realistically: "Even if I had to miss the whole season, it would be worth it for my career. I'm playing with the rookies in Florida now, but after four or five

Celtics Oust Cavaliers In Game 6, Gain Final

CLEVELAND, May 18 (AP) Charlie Scott stole a pass and drove for the clinching basket tonight, giving the Boston Celtics a 94-87 victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers for the National Basketball Association Eastern Conference championship.

The triumph gave the Celtics the four-of-seven-game series, 4-2, and moved them into the final round for the 14th time. Boston will be the host to the Phoenix Suns in the opening game Sunday afternoon.

Scott and his running mate at guard, Jo Jo White, foiled the Cavaliers' bid to make the final for the first time. White poured in 29 points and Scott contributed 20.

Scott, who went to the Celtics in an off-season trade from Phoenix, pulled the defensive play of the game with 38 seconds to go. He cut in front of Austin Carr, picked off Campy Russell's pass and raced down the floor for a stuff shot that gave Boston an 88-85 lead.

Moments later, White drove in for another layup and a 90-85 lead before a fourth straight Coliseum crowd of 21,564.

Carr delivered another brilliant performance as a Cavalier reserve. The fourth-year man from Notre Dame poured in 26 points. Bobby (Bingo) Smith added 16.

Dave Cowens, despite getting into early foul trouble, shook loose for 21 points for the Celtics.

Both sides appeared tense in the opening minutes. Cleveland missed seven of its first eight shots and Boston could connect on only two of 11.

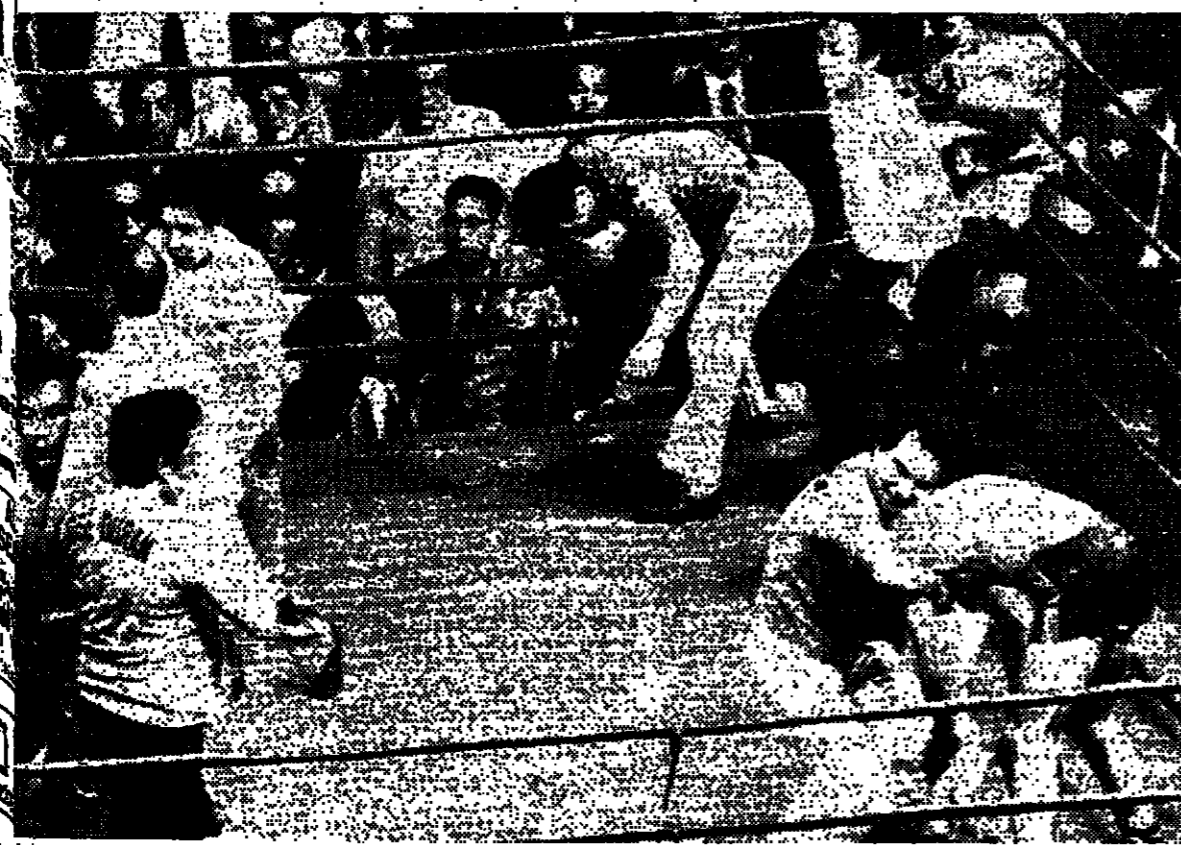

Cowens picked up his third personal with 13 seconds to play in the first quarter. He sat out almost seven minutes and the Cavaliers took advantage by outscoring Boston, 15-7, with Jim Ard filling in for Cowens. That gave the Cavaliers a 35-29 lead with more than five minutes to go in the first half.

Scott poured in 8 straight points in a 2½-minute stretch to pull the Celtics even at 39-39 with 2 minutes 15 seconds remaining in the second quarter.

Cleveland's Nat Thurmond, again filling in for the injured Jim Chones at center, picked up his third foul with nearly five minutes to play in the first half. However, his replacement, Luke Witte, played Cowens to a 4-4 standstill in the last minutes of the half, and that

Yankees Trade 2 to Acquire May

The New York Yankees announced today that they had acquired Carlos May from the Cleveland Indians in a trade that also sent two other players to Cleveland.

The frigid weather held down the crowd, but the main reason for the sparse turnout was the Cleveland-Boston National Basketball Association playoff game 28 miles away at the Coliseum. The game was also shown on local television.

Hunter, who gave up four runs in the first inning in his loss to Baltimore last Friday, reduced the mishap to three tonight. Duane Kuiper began the game with a single to right-center, Buddy Bell singled between first and second, Rick Manning walked and Rico Carty hit a two-run single to center. George Hendrick hit a looper to short center that Fred Stanier, the shortstop, tumbled and caught. Stanier was not able to prevent Manning from scoring on the fly.

Cleveland added two more runs in the third when Carty singled again and Hendrick drove his seventh home run of the year beyond the canvas fence in left field.

The Yankees had base-runners in each of the first three innings against Peterson, but could not advance them. They got a run in the fourth on Lou Piniella's double to left and Otto Velez's single to the same spot.

Hunter and Peterson, both speedy workers, sailed through the middle innings and it looked like a two-hour baseball game. The Indians added a run in the seventh when Frank Duffy walked, Kuiper singled and Bell hit a grounder to third that scored Duffy.

The Yankees sent 10 men to the plate in the ninth, and five of them scored. Piniella and Graig Nettles started with singles and Frank Robinson, the Cleveland manager, relieved Peterson of further responsibility, calling in Dave LaRoche.

Booth Sailing at Olympic Racing Site

ERT TRUMBULL
The New York Times reported that the construction of a new sailing site in Ontario, Canada, is well advanced.

The New York Times/May 19, 1976

The $600,000 harbor reconstruction, paid for by the Federal Government, is a completed. Virtually all that remains to be done on the $4 million building, financed by the Montreal Olympic organizing committee, is to install the portable furnishings and equipment now on the site.

In short, Kingston is ready for its part in the Olympics. The yacht racing, best viewed from a $10 seat on the ferry, Wolf Island, is one of the events for which many tickets are still available. Except on the opening and closing days, admission to the Olympic Yachting Center is free.

The two-story concrete building, designed by a consortium of Kingston architects, makes use of an exposed steel skeleton effect inside, called a "space frame," with wood trim in Canadian red cedar. The second-story restaurant, with a sweeping view of the harbor, and the generous space for exhibitions and functions, once the technical installations for the Olympics are removed, will be a permanent addition to the city's amenities.

The New York Mets and the New York Yankees are privately owned businesses operated for profit in parks built and owned by the taxpayers of New York.

Harrison J. Goldin, the City Comptroller, fired a round of flak at Steinbrenner recently, announcing that "in view of the unreasonable, arbitrary and contemptuous action of the Yankee management in vetoing the Foreman-Frazier fight," he was urging renegotiations of the Stadium lease.

Calling the excuse about the grass "incomprehensible," Goldin said engineers in his office were certain that any damage to the grass would be minor and could have been repaired by the city at small cost.

He pointed out that the city and state had scaled down taxes on closed-circuit promotions to attract such events, adding that, "We cannot allow these efforts to be undone by the arbitrary and arrogant acts of those who have received a $100 million windfall from the taxpayers."

"Therefore," he concluded, "I believe the city should insist on an immediate change in the veto clause."

The Comptroller's stance is four-square, his position admirable, his indignation justified and his phrases well-rounded, but it all boils down to an empty threat. The Yankees and Mets aren't going to give up the privileges conveyed to them by contract, and Goldin can't make them do it. His press spokesman, Paul O'Brien, didn't exactly concede this yesterday but he didn't dispute it either.

"The Comptroller," he said, "is not suggesting that the city breach the contract, walk away from it, act unilaterally. He chose the word 'negotiations.' That's not, I hasten to add, a suggestion that the city can or should walk out on the contract. It can't do that. But the city cannot conceivably be without resources."

"You'd be surprised. Sometimes this kind of statement may have consequences. There is such a thing as public opinion and it does at times have salutary consequences. Perhaps the negotiations we're talking about could be aimed at giving the city a role in these decisions. We've never said that the authority would have to shift entirely from the Yankees to the city. The comptroller under the charter is directed and obligated to comment on matters relating to the city's fiscal position. Now, I grant you this is a pretty strong comment but he does conceive it as being part of his role. I guess that if he himself were part of the administration back when all this was done, I guess that he would have said nothing."

"I made a deal with the city to rent the stadium," the Garden's Mike Burke said yesterday. "And I made a deal with Steinbrenner—that is, get the Yankees' permission for the deal with the city. In fact, a team from the Garden is going up there today to discuss plans with a team from the Stadium."

The main reason given for chasing the Foreman-Frazier bout out to the Nassau Coliseum was that a fight crowd's feet might damage the tender new grass of the Yankee Stadium playing field. The grass will be more mature by Sept. 28 but if the Yankees are still championship contenders then, the condition of the field will be vitally important. The team returns home to close the season in a three-game series Oct. 1, 2 and 3, with the pennant playoffs and World Series to follow.

Possibly this means that management is confident the Yankees won't be in the race in September, though they lead their division now. Or that the grass will be tougher, or customers at a heavyweight championship lighter of feet than the clientele at a nontitle match. Or perhaps Steinbrenner is getting gunshy. (Neither he nor Gabe Paul, the Yankees' president, was available to discuss the point yesterday. Gabe's office said he was in

Warriors' Vertlieb Resigns

BY LEONARD KOPPELT
Special to The New York Times
OAKLAND, Calif., May 18 — The bewildering speed with which circumstances can change in sports was demonstrated again today when Dick Vertlieb, the general manager of the Golden State Warriors, confirmed the news that he was leaving that post to become chief executive officer of the Seattle baseball team that will enter the American League next season.

Less than 48 hours before, the Warriors appeared headed for the final round of the National Basketball Association playoffs, in defense of the title they won last year, and there was no indication that this recently revived franchise was facing major changes.

But on Sunday, the Warriors lost the seventh and final game of the semifinal round, at home, to the Phoenix Suns. Suddenly, this season was over, and the following not necessarily related items moved into the spotlight.

"The possibility that Rick Barry, the team's most important player, might retire at the age of 32 after 11 professional seasons. He is most did last summer. This would require major reconstruction of the team.

The departure of Vertlieb and his right-hand man, Hal Childs, who will go with him to Seattle. This will require total replacement of the front-office team, which in the last two years dramatically turned a failing franchise into a prosperous one.

The continuing attempt by Franklin Mieleu, the owner of the Warriors, to acquire majority control of the San Francisco 49ers of the National Football League, in which he has a minority interest, if he does that, he will dispose of his controlling interest in the basketball team, over which he exercised full control for a decade before turning the daily operation over to Vertlieb two years ago.

Fresh doubts raised last week about the eventual construction of a new sports arena in downtown San Francisco, which would have important long-range effects on this area's sports picture. The

Moscow Preparing For 1980 Olympics

With the lessons of Montreal's inadequate financing and construction delays in mind—lessons that became obvious even before this year's Olympic Games were scheduled to begin there—the Soviet Union is hard at work now preparing for the 1980 Moscow Olympics.

Vladimir L. Koval, vice chairman of the Soviet Olympic Organizing Committee, told a news conference yesterday that the Soviet Union did not expect to have the problems which seem to be facing Montreal for the 1976 Games. We had the advantage of starting with more facilities already in place."

Speaking through an interpreter—Viktor Krylov of the State Committee for Science and Technology—Koval gave no overall cost estimate for the Moscow Olympics. But he said that the Soviet Union would assume the costs for all stadiums and structures.

Looks for U.S. Support

Koval's principal reason for coming to the United States now is to enlist American companies as actively participating official suppliers for the Moscow Olympics, in order to raise money to defray some of the costs for the Games which have gone as high as $2 billion for previous Games in Tokyo and Munich.

"Some American companies have supplied the Munich and Montreal Olympics," Koval said. "We don't see why the same thing should not happen in Moscow."

2 Drivers Reinstated At Westbury

Roosevelt's officials explained this afternoon that "after a thorough investigation nothing adverse to Gilmour and Webster was discovered."

"After all," said George Morton Levy, the track's president, "you can't keep penalizing men on just doubts. Our main complaint was that these two horsemen refused to take the test after joining others in promising to do so if so requested. Both eventually did so. Our grievance has been satisfied."

Yonkers Raceway had also respected Roosevelt's suspension action and refused to permit the two drivers to perform. Gerald Lawrence, the vice president of the track in Westchester, was asked today whether his track would again be open to Gilmour and Webster when racing returns to Yonkers on July 19.

"All we can say now is that we will carefully review all stall applications prior to the opening of that meeting—as we always do. A decision as to all stall assignments will be made at that time," Lawrence said.

Gilmour, appearing at Roosevelt's barn area this morning, was warmly received by other horsemen. He spent most of the visit in the office of his nephew, Don Sider, a trainer. Two of the horses driven by the Canadian tonight were conditioned by Sider.

Gilmour owns a large farm at Ridgeway, Ontario, about six miles from Buffalo. During his suspension by the metropolitan area tracks, he did little driving. He performed at Brandywine and Freehold in Canada.

Asked how he had fared, he replied: "You wouldn't need a calculator to add up the wins. John Lopez, a friend of Gilmour's, appears in Sider's office in the barn area toting a large rectangular-shaped cake. 'Welcome Back, Buddy' was written on the cake and small American flags were set in each corner."

"How about a piece?" asked Russell Rash, a driver. "That cake sure looks tempting."

"Not on your life," answered Gilmour. "I'm taking this home as is. My family will get a treat just looking at it."

Smooth Sailing at Olympic Site

the broad second-floor promenade overlooking the water. From there they may see little of the action in the races, much of which will take place out of sight. But they can watch the rigging of the boats as they set out and the de-rigging when they return from the day's racing.

Sailing conditions at Kingston, always considered among the world's best, will be even better as a result of the improvements to Portsmouth Harbor, site of the races, according to officials.

The new construction includes a breakwater consisting of steel-pipe A frames supporting 20-ton concrete slabs in a louver effect that lets the water flow through freely, at the same time quieting the wave action. Individual floating jetties now allow yachts to moor alongside safely, regardless of fluctuations in the water level.

Lake Ontario off Kingston is a superior place for sailing, according to yachtsmen here, because the normal movements of weather fronts in the area provide good winds from three directions.

"Although there can be calm and gales, too," said a resident boatman, "there are very few days when there is no wind at all."

To insure good winds for the Olympic races, three triangular courses have been laid out on the lake. One is for the Solings, Tempests and Flying Dutchmen, another for the Finns and 470's and a third for the Tornados.

King Olaf of Norway, the yachting monarch, is expected to be a competitor. Elizabeth II of Britain and her husband, Prince Philip, will be spectators aboard the royal yacht Britannia on July 29. When the Olympic Yachting Center is turned over to the city government after the competition, it will become a "municipal boat club," said the commissioner of parks and recreation, Douglas H. Elhner.

"We want to make it a 'people place,'" he said, adding that his department had received 178 applications for seasonal berthing permits.

proposed building would hold up to 19,000 and have better accessibility while the Oakland Coliseum now used by the Warriors and the hockey Seals holds only 13,000.

Vertlieb insists that all these things are coincidental as far as he is concerned.

"The chance to go back to Seattle is a personal matter," he said. "I was in business there for seven years before coming here, and I feel I'll be going home. My family will be better off there, and the owners of the baseball team—Les Smith and Danny Kaye and some others—are people I've known well for a long time. We have no contract yet, but that's what I'm going to do."

"I would be doing the same thing if the Warriors had won Sunday, and had gone on to a championship. I only wish they had. And I don't know Franklin's plans for the future. All that I know is that he was great to me in every way and lived up to every thing he ever said he would do."

The record of the Vertlieb-Childs team is impressive. Vertlieb is from Los Angeles originally, but he and Childs got the new Seattle SuperSonics franchise off the ground when it was formed in 1967. Ironically, their first coach was Al Bianchi, who is now an assistant coach with Phoenix.

The Sonics were originally owned by Sam Schulman and Gene Klein, who came out of Los Angeles, and for them Vertlieb built so firm a foundation that the franchise has been one of the most successful ever since, even though the team has never made the playoffs until last season. Within three years, however, the ownership situation changed, with Klein out, some public ownership in, and Schulman taking more control as president.

Vertlieb went on to work with soccer and hockey teams in Seattle, building more success, and into the investment business, until Miteff brought him here in June, 1974.

A personal disappointment with big stars, low attendance and few playoff successes, the Warriors had a history of letting top draft choices escape. Vertlieb promptly traded Nate Thurmond (considered untouchable by the emotional Miteff) for Cliff Ray and several hundred thousand dollars and signed Jamaal Wilkes and Phil Smith, rookies who helped to bring about the championship. And attendance virtually doubled, from under 6,000 a game in 1974 to nearly 12,000 this year.

So here is a franchise which, only a few days ago, appeared to have championship status, front-office talent, stable ownership and a possible new home among its assets. Now everything is indefinite. It's a volatile business.

Bridge: U.S. Loses a Close Battle To Canada in the Olympiad

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Special to The New York Times: MONTE CARLO, Monaco, May 18—Following a rest day, the United States had slightly the worst of a hard-fought battle against Canada here tonight in the World Olympiad, losing 9 to 11.

The leading teams all won modest victories, Italy 15 to 5 against Ireland, Britain 13 to 7 against Switzerland and Sweden 12 to 8 against New Zealand.

In the late-night session, the Americans blitzed Yugoslavians but did not gain on the Italians, who were equally successful against Morocco.

The standings after 32 rounds were: Italy, 479; Britain, 461; Sweden, 460; Brazil, 451; Poland, 448; France, 447; Switzerland, 419; Germany, 417; and United States, 415.

The United States women's team, facing a deficit of 60 international match points at the halfway stage against France, pulled back 25 points, but still lost, 4 to 16. Italy and Britain moved farther ahead by scoring big victories, and the race for the title now seems to be between these two countries.

In a crucial match between the United States and Italy, the Americans led at the halfway stage by eight international match points.

The standings in the women's tournament are: Italy, 229; Britain, 209; Canada, 197; and the United States, tied with France, 182.

An Example of Skill

The young Swedish team has been playing with great flair throughout the tournament, and has been in the lead or close to it throughout. The disgraced deal from a match against Ireland is an example of the skill of Anders Morath, who sat South. As he plays a strong club system, he was forced to open with one heart, and eventually found himself struggling in game in a shaky 4-3 fit. He won the opening lead of the spade queen with the ace, and ran the heart ten around to East's queen. The diamond ace was led and ruffed by declarer, who captured the jack with dummy's ace. He led the club ten, finessing, and repeated the finesse. West would have been in trouble if he had ruffed so he discarded on this and two more club leads, producing this tricky ending:

 ♥ A54
 ♦ QJ1074
 ♣ 107

EAST
 ♠ 85
 ♥ Q73
 ♦ A985
 ♣ Q632

 ♥ 10986
 ♦ AKJ984

North and South were vulnerable. The bidding: West North East South
 Pass Pass Pass 1♥
 1♠ 2♥ Pass 3♠
 Pass 3♥ Pass 4♥
 Pass Pass Pass

 ♦ QJ

 ♠ 8
 ♦ 985

 ♠ K2
 ♦ 98

The defense had taken one trick, and when South led a club and South discarded a spade from the dummy, it was all over. East could ruff, and there was no way to prevent declarer from making three more tricks. East played a diamond, and South ruffed and played his last club winner. If East had returned a spade, it would have made no difference. West's hearing would in all cases have been the third and last trick for the defense.

This was an elegant example of how to handle a shaky trump suit.

Finnish Coalition To Stay in Office, Heeding President

HELSINKI, Finland, May 18 (UPI)—President Urho Kekkonen has persuaded the five-party coalition Government to withdraw the resignation it offered last Thursday because of the refusal of four Communist ministers to agree to a sales tax increase.

All coalition partners—the agrarian Centrists, the Social Democrats, Communists, Liberals and the Swedish People's Party—had previously insisted that major decisions must be unanimous or the Government must resign. But after leaders of each had met separately with the President, they agreed to continue in office and allow the Communists to register their opposition to the proposed tax.

Prime Minister Martti Miettunen, a Centrist, withdrew the coalition's resignation today, and Finland continued to be the only West European country with Communists in its Cabinet.

It had also required strong Presidential pressure five months ago to get the five parties to agree to form what was described as a Government of national salvation to deal with an economic crisis.

In the last few days Mr. Kekkonen had placed especially strong pressure on the Social Democrats and the Communists to agree to remain in the Government. The Social Democrats are Finland's largest political party, holding 54 of the 200 seats in Parliament, and the Communists, holding 40 as members of the Finnish People's Democratic League, their political cover organization, are the second largest.

The Social Democrats must now explain to their backers why they are supporting an increase in sales tax from 11 to 13 percent while the Communists can contend that they and not the Social Democrats are the champions of labor by voting against the tax.

Palmer Lands in Teheran After Delay

TEHERAN, Iran, May 18 (AP)—Flying a Learjet in his round-the-world trip, Arnold Palmer arrived today from Paris. He gave 16-year-old Crown Prince Reza Pahlavi a United States Bicentennial flag and a bronze reproduction of the Declaration of Independence. The golfer did the second leg of his attempt at a world record in 5½ hours, which was on time. Because of headwinds over the Atlantic, he said, he had to land in Wales for refueling before going on to Paris. He took off here for Colombo, Sri Lanka, his next stop.

Campbell Asks Hockey Violence Curbs

MONTREAL, May 18 (AP)—Clarence Campbell, president of the National Hockey League, said today he had sent a letter to the 18 teams urging that they support proposals for stronger rules to curb violence on the ice and "make the game more acceptable to our society." The letter also asked greater acceptance by a team of responsibility for the actions of its players. The proposals will come up at the league's annual meeting next month.

House Passes Sports Bill

WASHINGTON, May 18 (AP)—Legislation to create a special Congressional committee to investigate professional sports, especially baseball, was approved without dissent today in the House. The House took less than 10 minutes to pass the measure, sponsored primarily by Representative B. F. Sisk, Democrat of California.

The measure sets up a 13-member special committee "to conduct an inquiry into the need for legislation with respect to professional sports." The committee's primary concern is baseball. "The committee's primary concern is baseball," Sisk said. "We have had football hearings. We are not going to redo those hearings."

Sisk headed an ad hoc Congressional committee that sought unsuccessfully for the last five years to return baseball to Washington. After major league baseball rebuffed the committee last month by refusing to expand to Washington, Sisk and other members of Congress said they felt that the owners had broken their promise.

Seven Go on Trial On Race-Fix Count

CHICAGO, May 18 (AP)—A Federal prosecutor said Tuesday that five harness racing drivers and two trainers fixed a race at Washington Park on Nov. 24, 1971.

In a jury trial in United States District Court, Assistant United States Attorney Judge Hubert L. Will that the seven men conspired to fix the race "knowingly and willfully."

Charged in the scheme are Stanley E. Banks, 39 years old, of Dwight; Joseph A. Consentino, 33, of Chicago, a trainer; Jerry Ember, 49, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla.; William E. Lutes, 39, of Batavia; Anton M. Menas, 42, of Fond Du Lac, Wis., a trainer; John S. Serle, 39, of Princeton; and John M. Ackerman, 49, of Deerfield Beach, Fla.

In his opening statement, Handler said the drivers were promised the proceeds of $100 win bets, $200 win bets, or daily double bets. He said the scheme began when Menas and George Shaw, a driver named as an unindicted co-conspirator, agreed to fix the race.

Chinaglia of Cosmos Praised for Debut

By ALEX YANNIS

Giorgio Chinaglia's family, relatives and friends who turned out for the game said they were impressed by the way the Cosmos and Chinaglia performed against the Aztecs Monday night and so did Giorgio Best, the flamboyant Irishman, whose team was routed, 6-0, by the Cosmos.

"I was impressed, very impressed," Best said of Chinaglia and the Cosmos, who meet the Boston Minutemen at Schaefer Stadium in Foxboro, Mass., at 7:30 tonight.

No script writer could have come up with a better story for Chinaglia's debut with the Cosmos. The towering Italian center forward, for whom the Cosmos paid a reported $850,000, scored two goals and had a hand in three others, two of them by Keith Eddy, the captain.

The 29-year-old Chinaglia is in his prime. He showed that during every minute of the game on Monday night at Yankee Stadium, displaying his limitless skills and scoring ability. Don't believe him when he says "I was just one of the 11 players."

"Giorgio gives us more of a threat," said Ken Furphy, the Cosmos' coach. Chinaglia's teammate, Pelé, who scored the Cosmos' other two goals Monday night said: "Chinaglia is a very experienced player. He will help us tremendously."

Surprisingly, Furphy dropped Ramon Miffitt from Monday night's starting lineup. The book on Miffitt, a former teammate of Pelé at Santos, is that he is a master on offense, but cannot play defense. "Ramon hasn't been doing the things Ken wants him to," said a Cosmos' player, who wished to remain anonymous.

The starting lineup for the Cosmos against the Aztecs was: Bob Rigby, Bob Smith, Mike Dillon, Keith Eddy, Brian Rowan, Dave Clements, Terry Garbett, Pelé, Brian Tinnon, Chinaglia and Tony Field. The same players are expected to start against the Minutemen, who have won their last three games after losing their opener.

A.S.L. Sets Playoffs

The owners of the American Soccer League decided during the league meetings in Chicago, on a playoff format. Commissioner Bob Cousy has announced. He said the first three teams in the Eastern and Western Divisions would be eligible for the playoffs, with the first-place finishers getting a bye into the semifinals.

Starting tonight with the New Jersey Americans, the A.S.L.'s 11 franchises will play the Cork Hibernians of Ireland in matches that will count in the league standing. The Hibernians' next game will be against the New York Apollons at Hofstra University's stadium on Friday night.

The International Soccer Federation, the world's governing body of soccer, has announced that two players from each club would undergo drug tests after each first-round contest in the Olympic Games in Montreal. 3RD BALLOT: Democrats and the Disaster in Madison Square Garden. By Robert Murray. 326 pages. Illustrated. Harper Row. $10.95.

It's a reason why New York hasn't lost to a national political convention over half a century. In 1924, thanks to a bid of $255,000 from the city, the Democratic Party reluctantly agreed to go what was widely regarded as a "friendly place" to hold its first convention there since 1868, when Horatio had been held in Tammany Hall. What has since become known as the Disaster in Madison Square Garden (the original name of the book) is the story of the 103rd Ballot. The disaster was the result of the 103rd Ballot, a convention of the Democratic Party in Madison Square Garden in 1924. The book is a history of the party's internal struggles, from the time of the 103rd Ballot to the present. It is a well-written and informative book that provides a detailed account of the party's history and the challenges it has faced over the years.

all the drama of the fight, he doesn't overlook the complex background of the stalemate: the issues of religion and Prohibition that made Smith and McAdoo absolutely unacceptable to each other's followers; the scandal of Teapot Dome, which had touched McAdoo with an oily swipe; the question of whether to repudiate the Ku Klux Klan, over which the convention nearly disintegrated into an open brawl; and the maneuverings of William Jennings Bryan, who kept trying to unite the delegates with echoes of his 1892 Cross of Gold speech, but ended up being crucified on his own pulpit.

Nor does the author scant the trivial but amusing detail—the moment when the band struck up "Ole Black Joe" at the nomination of Nebraska Senator Joseph Robinson, who was then under suspension from the Chevy Chase Country Club for blackening the eye of a fellow golfer on the 15th green, or the release of a pigeon symbolizing the Dove of Peace, whose "continued presence . . . among the hall's steel rafters . . . caused nervous glances to be cast heavenward by the assembled delegates."

Muddling Through Adversity

What's more, Professor Murray hasn't only created a lively narrative; he has built it around the interesting thesis—which he credits to David Burner's 1968 study, "The Politics of Provincialism: The Democratic Party in Transition, 1918-1932"—that though the Democratic "party suffered horribly in the presidential elections of 1924 and 1928 . . . paradoxically, political trends at the state and local levels were running in its favor . . ." so that "finally, in 1932, Franklin Roosevelt came into office as the result of shifts in voting patterns which had been building for some time and which were only partly Depression-induced." (One of the more dramatic consequences of this thesis is that Al Smith and his "brown-derby campaign" of 1928 are viewed not as a harbinger of the New Deal but as symptomatic of what had kept the party divided until the new voting patterns were established.) In short, the years from 1920 until 1932 may have been a time in the wilderness for the Democrats, but converts were being made and the 1924 convention only highlighted the need for them.

Is there anything to be got from "The 103rd Ballot" besides entertainment and a revision of the Al Smith legend? I suppose one could play around with certain historical parallels—such as that the incumbent President, Calvin Coolidge, was a do-little Republican presiding in prosperous times, who had inherited his office from a scandal-ridden predecessor; or that one of the divisive issues among the Democrats was the question of religious fundamentalism. But history rarely repeats itself, George Santayana to the contrary notwithstanding. I guess we should just keep in mind how rudely New Yorkers behaved in 1924 ("about the only thing the delegates could agree upon as they left the Garden was that they never again would attend another convention in New York City"). This time, no Bronx cheers from the gallery, please.

Unyielding Tug-of-War

If this convention was a recording disaster for the Democrats, it is a boon to Professor Murray, for his reconstruction makes wonderfully readable. Although one knows vis ultimately win the nomination follows as if it were a scoreless game between two Big 10 football teams, the unyielding tug-of-war between California lawyer, William G. McAdoo and never quite garner a majority delegates when he needed two-thirds for the nomination, and Gov. E. Smith of New York (who held a majority of the delegates, or enough for a veto), although Professor Murray captures

Provocations: West Bank

The human and political tragedy engulfing the West Bank of the Jordan threatens to undermine whatever success has been achieved there—and it has been considerable—in the nine-year experiment in Arab-Israeli coexistence. Another young Arab was shot and killed yesterday by Israeli gunfire, the third in as many days and the tenth Arab killed in the past four months of unrest.

There is no objective way—nor much practical utility—in assigning specific blame for the bloody incidents on the West Bank. Perhaps the youthful mobs were indeed provoking Israeli troops and threatening to break down public order, as the Israelis claim; perhaps the Israeli troops were trigger-happy, as the Arabs claim. The only fact that is certain is that Arabs and Israelis alike are flirting with disaster in their reliance on forceful confrontation to make their political points.

Arab propagandists are showing cynical contempt for human well-being in their gratuitous bids at the United Nations and elsewhere to make political capital out of the simmering West Bank tensions. The Israeli Government, preoccupied with internal dissension, is showing lack of sensitivity to the concerns of its neighbors by ramming through ever more expansive plans to create Israeli settlements in populated occupied territories.

The current clashes are doubly tragic, for both the Israeli occupation administrators and the Palestinian Arab communities of the West Bank had much to be proud of in their efforts at living together these past nine years. If the current spiral of violence is not quickly checked, the West Bank will disintegrate as a model of future cooperation. Neither Arabs nor Israelis are helping to achieve their stated goal of peace by these ill-considered provocations.

...and Lebanon

If Israeli authority is under pressure on the West Bank, the leading forces of the Arab world are facing their own challenge in Lebanon, where the combat is far graver, bloodier and virtually out of control. On days when single isolated deaths bring grief in Jerusalem, hundreds of casualties are reported routinely from Beirut—including last weekend the chance killing of Edouard Saab of Le Monde, one of the most respected correspondents in the Middle East, and the hair's-breadth escape with but minor injuries of Times correspondent Henry Tanner.

What started 13 months ago as a civil war between rival religious and economic communities in the Arabs' most cosmopolitan crossroads has gradually escalated into a proxy war between the divergent ideologies that fragment the cause of Arab nationalism. Lebanese leftists, enthusiastically supported by Iraq, Libya and other radical forces, are now pressing for higher stakes than a fairer distribution of political power in Beirut. It is no longer only the besieged Christian minority of Lebanon that is threatened; it is the established regimes of the Arab world, all of which have reason to fear the violent collapse of the Lebanese power structure.

In full—if belated—recognition of this explosive threat, Syria's President Assad eased himself away from the Arab radicals he had formerly championed and emerged as the leading influence for stability and the status quo—duly modified—in Lebanon. Now Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, conservative and moderate Arab regimes respectively, have succeeded in setting the scene for what would be an even more dramatic shift of alignments; a high-level meeting is due to open today in Riyadh between the Prime Ministers of Syria and Egypt.

These two Governments, longtime rivals for leadership among the Arabs, have been openly feuding since last September, when Egyptian President Sadat reached an interim agreement with Israel. Instead of following the Egyptian lead as Cairo and Washington expected him to do, President Assad denounced the Sinai agreement and blocked any further diplomatic steps toward even a limited settlement with Israel.

Faced with common dangers in Lebanon, the leaders of Syria and Egypt may now find mutual self-interest in burying the feud that has so sapped Arab unity and encouraged extremist maneuverings in utter disregard of the toll in human lives. In an atmosphere of such bitterness, success will not come easily to the high-level meetings. If they fail to overcome the existing formidable differences, at least enough to pull Lebanon back from anarchy, the entire Middle East may find itself slipping toward a violent upheaval that cannot be contained within any one country's frontiers.

Docility Toward Spain

With dismayingly docility, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has approved a five-year treaty that authorizes continued American use of military bases in Spain in return for loans and grants of $1.2 billion to that country. In its approach to the committee, the Administration emphasized the desirability of completing ratification of the treaty prior to the Washington visit next month of King Juan Carlos I.

From a public relations standpoint ratification could conceivably be handled in ways that would strengthen the hand of the young King in his efforts to dismantle some of the authoritarian machinery of Generalissimo Franco's dictatorship and to hasten badly needed political reform.

The fact is, however, that in the six months since General Franco's death, change has proceeded at a glacial pace, productive only of continuing political polarization, disheartening to Spain's democratic forces and destructive of the country's hopes for an expanding relationship that would lead eventually to membership in the European Community.

Prime Minister Carlos Arias Navarro—a relic of the Franco era—still hedges on the critical question of a general political amnesty. He promises to legalize political associations but thus far has carefully avoided the word "parties." He has scheduled an autumn referendum on setting up a two-chamber Parliament; but the upper house would be non-elected and stacked with Francoists. Even these limited reforms have been assailed as too radical by 126 members of Franco's holdover Parliament.

In its ratification resolution, the Senate committee expresses the pious hope that the treaty will foster Spain's "progress toward free institutions," its participation in European Community institutions, and its eventual cooperation in European defense with NATO. The resolution implies that in considering annual authorizations and appropriations required for the agreements linked to the treaty, Congress will monitor Spain's advances toward these goals.

But if two-thirds of the Senate meekly approves the treaty, the United States will have made a costly five-year commitment in exchange for nothing more than strictly limited, and almost certainly short-run, military advantages. There is no guarantee of progress toward a freer society which alone will qualify Spain for either the European Community or NATO. In this instance, the attitude of critical and watchful waiting adopted by the United States' European allies is a far sounder policy than Washington's precipitate commitment.

After Tuition—Parity

Before the end of free tuition at the City University is finally decreed by Albany and accepted at City Hall, the surrender terms demand clarification. Unless the role of the state in the future financing of the university is substantially revised, the imposition of tuition will be a cruel hoax.

The imminent danger is that parity with the State University may extend only to the bills handed for CUNY's students but not to the subsidy provided for its budget. Such sleight of hand would further undermine the City University's fiscal base.

When there is parity in tuition for students at the city and state universities, parity in the state's per-student subsidy ought also to ride with it. At present, each full-time senior college student is supported by $3,305 in state aid at the state campuses; the annual equivalent for a full-time City University student is only $1,303. To perpetuate these discrepancies, at a time when it is obvious that the city is in no condition to close the gap, would condemn CUNY to inferior status and rapid academic deterioration.

Even with full parity in state aid, the City University will need some additional city funding to cope with many special urban problems, such as the much higher percentage of disadvantaged students whose education is inevitably more costly. In addition, the city will have to find the funds to waive tuition for many needy part-time students who, since they are not eligible for state assistance, would otherwise be forced to drop out.

Parity of tuition, without parity in state subsidy, would force the City University to live in the worst of both worlds—equal in charging the state's costly tuition fees but not at all equal when it comes to the state's benefits.

Caging the Elephant

In trying to approach the reform of the regulatory agencies, Congress in the past has been rather like the group of blind men in the fable, each of whom gave a different description of the elephant. There are many different committees and subcommittees, each of them concerned about a particular regulatory agency and a particular set of problems. "Reform" in general means something different to each of them, while reform in particular sets alarm bells ringing and awakens a covey of lobbyists.

President Ford has now proposed a simple way to look at the problem comprehensively. In effect, he suggests that the first task is to cage the elephant and then go over all of it systematically. His proposal is that Congress adopt a mandatory four-year schedule by which the President would be required to recommend and Congress to accept or reject proposals for reform of the Federal regulations covering most of the economy.

Beginning in 1977, the White House would submit proposals covering transportation and agriculture, followed in successive years by recommendations on mining, energy and heavy manufacturing; then on construction, light manufacturing, and occupational health and safety; and finally on white-collar areas such as finance, insurance and communications. It is an ambitious yet orderly and attainable schedule.

There is already considerable support for this approach in Congress. Senators Percy, Illinois Republican, and Byrd, West Virginia Democrat, and a bloc of ten other Senators from both parties introduced last year a bill providing for a complete overhaul on a five-year cycle. Under their plan, if any deadline were missed—depending on who missed it—either a given agency would lose its authority or the President's proposed changes would automatically become law.

Forty Senators are backing a parallel bill sponsored by Senator Muskie, Maine Democrat, that would establish a shutoff date for virtually every Federal program, agency and commission. Unless specifically re-authorized by Congress, each would go out of existence after five years. The objective of this so-called "sunset bill" is to do away with the natural Congressional and bureaucratic inertia that permits programs and agencies to continue simply because they are there.

Congress and the White House sooner or later will have to make some hard choices and some unpopular decisions. Regulatory reform is never going to become automatic. But if President Ford's proposal or something like it is put into effect, there will be at least a timetable forcing both branches of Government to debate those issues and face up to those decisions.

Letters to the Editor

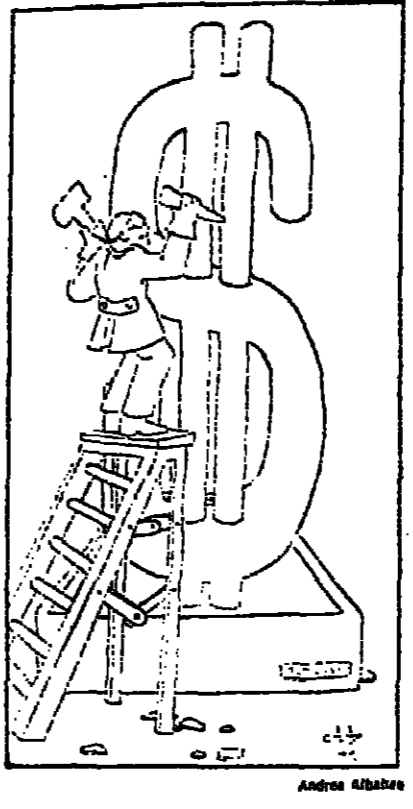

To Stop Our 'Legal Counterfeiters'

To the Editor:
Within one week The Times published two articles on the "creation" of money. The first (May 5) dealt with the Federal Reserve's open market operations, which Edwin L. Dale Jr. described as the Government's "printing press," i.e., "legalized counterfeiting." The second news article (May 10) described an "illegal" counterfeiting operation in the Bronx.

The question that should be raised is: Why is the Bronx operation illegal while the Federal Reserve's "printing press" is given legal status? Moreover, more often than not the Fed is criticized for not creating enough money for the economy. Consequently, should not the printing press operators in the Bronx be commended for their heroic efforts to increase the nation's money supply?

The truth of the matter, as Mr. Dale indicated, is that the monetary authorities do not know how much money to create for a "healthy economy." Yet, economic theory does provide us with an answer. According to Professor Hayek ("Prices and Production" [1933]) and other economists of the "Austrian" school, the creation of money is inflation, which in time not only causes prices to rise but also is responsible for the business cycle of boom and bust.

Furthermore, if it is illegal for private citizens to create money via the printing press, then, too, it should be illegal for the Federal Reserve—an arm of the Government—to create money via the banking system. If we have learned anything from the Water-gate caper, it is that no one is above the law. If it is illegal to create money, then it too must be illegal for Mr. Burns and his colleagues at the Federal Reserve to create money by buying Treasury bills or other Government securities in the open market. Consequently, the Federal Reserve's

Andreas Athanasiou

"legal counterfeiting" must cease at once if we are to eliminate inflation from our economy. Also, we must return to the classic gold standard in order to end the power of the Government in the economy's monetary affairs. By re-adopting the gold standard the value of money will be determined, like other commodities in the marketplace, by supply and demand. Since productivity will increase while the money (i.e. gold) supply will remain fairly stable, we will achieve a most welcome phenomenon: slowly falling prices for producers and consumers.

Ford Policy 'Schism'

To the Editor:
President Ford has an obvious schism in his Administration that needs repair, if it is not going to destroy the good work that has been accomplished. On the one hand, he has a financial adviser, Alan Greenspan, who is leading in the direction of more balanced economic policy, working against a continued policy of deficit spending. On the other hand, he has a Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger, who is broadcasting a policy of profligate spending of American tax money around the world. Mr. Ford must repair this dichotomy, if his Administration is going to survive.

In my opinion, the only way to do this is to bring his foreign policy into balance with his economic policy. Any other course would be irrational. This would, of necessity, mean a new Secretary of State. If he does not reconcile the dichotomy in his policies, he will go down to defeat, and it will not matter how many Goldwater surrogates he sends out to rationalize his mistakes. He should understand that the people are not as interested in personalities as they are in security. We need consistent reason in Washington, not more political deception.

To Be a Postal Worker

To the Editor:
Every day, with self-taught skills, we postal workers decipher illegible handwriting, supply a missing digit, write in the correct code, decide which of several similar street names is the right one, and so many letters otherwise undeliverable find their destination. How cruel, then, the remarks by William L. Mr. Gum, unstick yourself from faulty reasoning.

'Junk Mail' Call

To the Editor:
You and others have commented on the finances of the U.S. Postal Service. Perhaps a small experiment of mine will throw some light on the problem. For one month, chosen at random, I measured the weight of the "junk mail" received by my father, who is 92 years old and lives on a very modest pension. He has from time to time given a few dollars to various worthy causes and apparently thus got onto a lot of lists.

During the month from 10 April to 10 May 1976 he received 172 ounces of "junk mail." That's just under eleven pounds. At first-class rates that would have brought the Postal Service about $45. Often he received three or four envelopes on the same day from the same solicitor. All this stuff has to be carried and delivered, just like first-class mail. Isn't it obvious why the Postal Service is losing money?

Of Corporate Crime

To the Editor:
A Times editorial on May 6 attacked the Peoples Bicentennial Commission for offering a $25,000 reward to secretaries for evidence leading to the arrest, conviction and imprisonment of a chief executive officer of a Fortune 500 company for criminal activity relating to corporate operations. You referred to this as the organizing of an internal spying system in the business community.

The P.B.C. thinks The Times is applying a double standard in order to protect the interests of its own big-business management. After all, we can't remember The Times ever criticizing banks and other business firms for offering cash rewards for evidence leading to the arrest of bank robbers. We are merely applying the same concept to criminals who might happen to run banks and other businesses.

Does The Times think that employees should keep their mouths shut when they discover criminal wrongdoing inside corporate board rooms? Would The Times have applauded Rose Mary Woods for keeping her mouth shut and condemned John Dean for coming forward? Since when is coming forward with information relating to criminal wrongdoing tantamount to spying and disloyalty?

It sounds to us as if The Times needs a refresher course on law and order. The fact is, anyone having knowledge of criminal wrongdoing relating to kickbacks, embezzlement, bribes, stock frauds, tax evasions, etc. must make such information available to the proper authorities or become an accomplice in concealing the criminal act.

Four-fifths of all the crime committed in the U.S. last year was white-collar crime, not street crime. Why is it that The Times spends so little of its time pointing its pompous finger to crime in the corporate board room? Editorial "The Bottom Line," May 16.]

How does that cliché go? "Some liberals are always liberal, until the issues come home to roost in their own backyard." The Times is big business, run by big-business executives. We understand why the editorial management of The Times is so upset by our reward offer.

The New Refugees

To the Editor:
Nearly one million African refugees are now living in Portugal. Portuguese returnees (retornados) represent white and black citizens of Angola and Mozambique who chose to leave those troubled territories.

The situation is parallel to the population of Canada descending the U.S. in the period of one year, influx of retornados has put strains on the shattered economy of Portugal.

Many of the retornados originally placed in hotels, which to serve as temporary quarters, majority had the intention of going to Africa if the political climate improved. Now, this is clearly possible.

Those in the hotels face a problem now. With the onset of tourist season, many are being asked to leave hotels to make way for tourists. Also, food subsidies for individuals are in doubt in some cases because of this many of the refugees have taken to the streets and to occupy public buildings.

The task of the U.S. and the penn community should be to further aid to alleviate the situation. As for the pressed Portuguese Government, it should try to streamline aid program and take concrete steps to increase assistance. As one retornado recently told me in the U.S. "If they [the Government] are responsible for our having to come here, should at least give us a roof."

A Mideast Minority's Fate

To the Editor:
In her May 10 letter Ms. Nan Selwyn writes: "And then let Palestinians and Israelis live as equal citizens in Palestine."
Does Ms. Selwyn read newspaper? Did she ever hear about a core named Lebanon?

A well-established Christian minority is fighting for its life for a year now, and the cruel Christian massacre cost so far 20,000 deaths. Is she that naive it plain prejudice against Jews?

Rhodesian Priority

To the Editor:
Professor Kennan's remark black rule in Rhodesia (Op-Ed) raise pertinent concerns regard future of "democratic citizens" the white minority. Given the colonial history of Rhodesia, however considerations appear partisan.

By adding a moral perspective our African foreign policy, Secretary Kissinger has not promised things of a happy and prosperous to white Rhodesia. The time it may have passed, but clearly the responsibility for the mess in Ian Smith's determination to power at all costs. While the p of the European minority placed from its African do should inspire empathy, the greater brutalities currently in Rhodesia which require every urgent solution.

To argue further that a rule in Rhodesia might inspire a change in South Africa is eye suspect. The vindictiveness of a more representative power in either country is unpredictable. majority rule in both Rhodesia and South Africa is desirable. Aside from the ap nodes from the African lead which Kennan makes passing once, it is within the political and economic interest U.S. to support such change. It inspiring to know that we are of occasional ethical behavior.

Kennan's arguments may be praiseworthy, but they are narrow. As a respected and credible observer seems to have lost the forest-trees.

The Part-Time Judge

To the Editor:
The letter of resignation from Simeon Golar of the Family (Op-Ed May 6) deserves a full attention. He served the fortunate families who filled his until the numbers became so whelming that he had just minutes to consider and decide cases. He judged 125 cases a day, pressured schedule frustrates lawyer and client. It denies just the people, many of whom are miles whose whole life may be at an unwise decision.

A way out is suggested by Lou experience. According to the St Speaking News (spring 1976) Lou system of women magistrates been in existence seven years works well for England. The woman magistrate has served the start: Mrs. Pat Woodhouse, of the archdeacon of the City of don and canon of St. Paul's Cath. The magistrates serve without but are given travel expenses lunch money when required. The not sit every day and can lead a lives. Therefore, they go to their be with a background of normalcy. As a public service to our pent city, such a post should appear New York's able and well-edu women. Indeed, it is hoped that will be called to the Family Cou New York City—and answer the

Old Wine, New Bottles

By Stanley Hoffmann

PARIS—Never, according to Henry A. Kissinger, have Franco-American relations been better. On the surface, this is true. Many of the specific clashes of interest of the era of Charles de Gaulle appear to have vanished. American and French policies in the Middle East are no longer at odds. The United States no longer denounces France's unclear course. France's resignation to floating exchange rates has replaced de Gaulle's celebration of the gold standard. Transatlantic theological arguments about the proper institutions for West European unity have subsided. Détente, first practiced by de Gaulle, has become a narrow road well-traveled by West German and American statesmen, toward the same limited agreements and frustrations.

But we should look deeper. Behind these past conflicts there were far more serious sources of tension. They may seem dried out today, but are not, and could start flowing again. There is a conflict of conceptions of world affairs. The United States constantly sees itself as a superpower with "world responsibilities," surrounded by allies with parochial concerns. In the 1960's, Washington defined its role as that of a supreme leader of containment, and tended to assign to its allies the roles it deemed best for the common cause. In the Kissinger era, Washington has behaved as a neo-Bismarckian spider at the center of a vast cobweb, the only state capable of rearranging power relations all over the world, and of moving others toward a "stable structure of peace."

De Gaulle tried to chip away at the "two hegemonies," and especially at America's, so as to create a world order more favorable to middle powers such as France. Therefore, he attempted both to broaden France's margin of independence and make of France the ally of the emerging third world. True, neither Georges Pompidou nor Valéry Giscard d'Estaing have had such grandiose ambitions. But they have kept searching for a distinctive French policy along the same lines: Witness the continuity of French defense policy and third-world efforts. This explains why Mr. Kissinger's "Year of Europe" speech of April 1973 and his call for a United States-led common front of oil consumers in the winter of 1973-74 provoked a major Franco-American crisis despite the previous post-1968 rapprochement.

It could happen again especially because this difference in conceptions is wrapped in a kind of emotional dispute that involves national pride and transcends political calculations. The French resent what they sense to be America's conviction that Europe in general, France in particular, have become objects of policy rather than major actors, and that this time France's "genius of renewal" won't be able to reverse what is deemed a temporary decline. More even than the self-serving character of America's view of world affairs, it is its paternalism they dislike, and the American belief in America's "exceptionalism" and unique mission they deplore. They try to puncture it by pointing out — left and right, in Le Monde and in Gaullist circles—that the United States, far from being unique, behaves the way all great powers have always behaved: guided only by self-interest, with a heavy helping of violence and exploitation.

This, in turn, wounds Americans far more deeply than the mere quarrels over world strategy. For it seems to them that the French, alone among their allies, question the purity of America's intentions. The French answer: We are not interested in intentions, we just observe your acts. But Americans believe intentions matter.

Thus, what is at stake is nothing less than each nation's self-image. Each seems to deride the other's brand of love affair with himself. And each one resents the other's attitude, even more because he senses that he is being accused of a sin he knows he sometimes indulges in.

In 1976, the order of the day is not mutual recrimination but mutual ignorance, which still reflects the emotional dialogue of yesterday. Americans ignore or underestimate the truly epochal rejuvenation of France since World War II, the shift in values, behavior and institutions from a cramped, rural and small-town society into a major industrial economy.

They talk about the atavistic stubbornness of the French right or the doctrinaire dangers of the left without observing that the modern right accepts an industrial society and craves economic growth, that the new Socialist Party is a catch-all party, and that its revival is beginning to force the Communists to change.

Robert Rauschenberg

Too often, Americans either cling to clichés or notice only what has not changed much: the old structures of authority, the centralized state. They do not realize that these forces, which cause irritations and tensions, have nevertheless succeeded both in promoting social change and in preserving social integration. The wrangle over the Concorde, or over France's sale of nuclear reprocessing plants, revives the old quarrel: France's pride in her technological prowess is hurt, and the wound leads to doubts about the disinterestedness of American opposition.

Ignorance works both ways. Many Frenchmen think that the elimination of President Nixon after Watergate was either the outcome of a dirty political intrigue or an act of self-mutilation—still a way of denying the special virtues of the American system. Many believe that (partly as a result) the United States has now become unable to stop Soviet progress, or unwilling to keep fighting it. This view seems hard to square with French attacks on American imperialism, yet is not inconsistent with them; for the French are saying: America should be expected to act as a great power (and France to resist and help others resist), and is betraying its role when it stops acting that way. But this view also shows that the French understand little about the process of American politics and campaigns.

One's most fervent wish is that each society do better in educating its citizens about the other. Perfect harmony between France and America cannot be expected given their different positions and interests, for instance on the future world monetary system or on how far the industrial nations should go in meeting the demands of the developing ones. But mutual respect, and a modicum of understanding of the other's predicaments and performances, ought to be achieved. It is a long-term effort. This is a good year to begin.

Not Dogma or Religion

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS—According to François Mitterrand, the skillful politician who has made the Socialists France's largest party, next month's Italian elections will have major and unpredictable repercussions here.

If the Communists obtain posts in Rome's next Government, one will have to judge, first, whether they behave democratically and, second, whether they can successfully clean up Italy's economic mess. Either way French voters, who face their own legislative balloting in 1978, are likely to be much influenced.

Mr. Mitterrand, a handsome stocky man of 60, has had remarkable success leading this country's Socialists out of the wilderness. In 1971 when he took the party's helm, it represented only 10 percent of the electorate. Now it is more than three times as big. He explains this change by pointing out that a "historical compromise" such as that advocated by Italy's Communist boss, Enrico Berlinguer, was impossible in France.

Communism's own success in destroying Italy's Socialist Party, Mitterrand contends, left no bloc to combine with save the centrist Christian Democrats who have hitherto held power. But in France such strategy would be impossible for two reasons, he says: (1) Since de Gaulle's death the Gaullists have reverted to a classical rightist position; (2) any attempt by the Socialists to persist in an anti-Communist policy would have resulted in their own destruction, making French Communism as powerful as Italian Communism.

The Communist ideas had so thoroughly infiltrated French workers' attitudes, Mr. Mitterrand contends, that it wasn't possible for the Socialists to develop a workers' audience with an anti-Communist program. "Had we continued to preach anti-Communism, the Communist Party would now be as big here as the one in Italy. It would have gathered up the entire left."

He also saw an additional advantage in his tactic. "As long as Frenchmen believed victory of the left meant Communist domination, the left as a whole had no chance," he claims. "But now that they think Socialism will run the show, such a victory becomes possible."

Having explained the basis for his revival of a popular front, the united left, he defined Socialist ideology, describing this as "not a dogma or a religion" and adds that he himself is not a Marxist. He merely values Marxism as a way of evaluating productive forces, history and labor-capital relations.

He argues that France's own "democratic heritage of liberty is all-important" and could never accept the kind of authoritarian Marxism-Leninism practiced, for example, in the Soviet Union. He simply wants to reduce capitalism's power while "at the same time fully preserving freedom."

A government led by the Socialists would become inevitable if the leftist coalition wins a National Assembly majority in 1978. However, although the Fifth Republic's Constitution wasn't tailored for such a likelihood, Mitterrand hopes conservative President Giscard d'Estaing will remain chief of state until 1981 and work with a politically hostile cabinet and parliament.

Were he to become Prime Minister, Mr. Mitterrand says he would certainly wish to keep France loyal to the Atlantic treaty until another security system was produced—and none is even imaginable for the foreseeable future. It is ridiculous to contemplate the thought that Paris could reverse alliances by tying itself to Moscow.

The trouble was that the policy of NATO's principal partner, the United States, too often identified with imperialism or interference abroad. Sometimes it favored "detestable systems of government." He would "prefer to leave the alliance rather than have a Franco or Greek colonels system here."

But such a Washington attitude "need not continue." He recalled that he reminded Henry Kissinger when he met him in Washington: "Tito is a Communist and you are very happy with him. We French Socialists aren't Communists at all."

Mr. Mitterrand expresses confidence that if he governed France, "I'm sure we would have good relations with America. I feel the temperament of your country. I have always loved it. I have no hostile reflexes that might make things difficult."

The possibility of a Prime Minister Mitterrand is good right now. Most recent polls show the leftist coalition with 53 percent of the vote. But France is a volatile country and capable of swift changes.

And it is not easy to forecast French Communist tactics. They have always lagged behind Berlinguer. They recently abandoned formal allegiance to that outlaw concept, "dictatorship of the proletariat"—years after the Italians. Mitterrand wryly comments: "In terms of Abraham's famous sacrifice, they immolated a very sick sheep."

Which one still has a free press?

Is there one nation, one country in this whole list with a free press? Free to search out and print a clear and truthful account of the news as it happens?

The answer is no. Not one. And the list is growing. More governments see a free press as a critical threat to themselves. They fear a press that is free from their indirect influence and direct control. So, the people's right to know is sacrificed. And this is only the beginning. Once the free press is lost, most other freedoms simply don't have a chance.

In this country we know a self-governing society cannot survive without a free flow of information. As citizens, we accept a free press as our right. Its protection is built into the foundation of our nation's beginning.

But with that right, comes a newspaper's obligation to the people, to give them a fair and accurate account of the news.

The 33 newspapers that make up Knight-Ridder welcome that responsibility. We believe that no official governmental information system can be as effective as the independent, competitive reporting of individual newspapers.

Each newspaper free to serve the best interests of its community. Committed to an informed and enlightened people.

At Knight-Ridder we believe that no society can govern itself in darkness. And though the list is growing, we are dedicated to keeping this country off that list.

CITY U. PRESIDENTS BACK TUITION PLAN

State's Proposal Preferred by Majority to More Cuts in Academic Programs

By JUDITH CUMMINGS

The presidents of the colleges of City University, in their first pronouncement on tuition in the current crisis, have urged the Board of Higher Education to accede to state pressure for tuition rather than face additional cuts.

The statement by the Council of Presidents, representing the heads of the university's 20 units was adopted by a vote of 15 to 4. The existence of the statement was disclosed by sources close to the board's deliberations after the board declined once more, at its private meeting Monday night, to confront the question of ending the free-tuition policy for undergraduate students.

In another development, First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti said the city would not advance the university $34 million from next month's allotment to pay this month's bills, despite a warning from the university Chancellor, Robert J. Kibbee, that a month-long furlough of workers beginning May 23—which would essentially shut down the university for that period—would be necessary without emergency money. Thus, he added to the pressures on the board to resolve its financing negotiations with the state.

City Gave Aid in Past

The city reluctantly advanced similar sums for the last two months after the university overspent its monthly allotment.

Several board members, after taking no action in response to Governor Carey's call for City University tuition at State University rates of $750 to $900 a year, said they would not consider the issue until they were given the Governor's legislative package for the City University, including his proposal on a financing formula. They said they had been told to expect it this week.

The two-page statement by the Council of Presidents, after a warning that any further reduction in the university's budget would "irreparably weaken" academic programs, said in part:

"Should the imposition of tuition be required by the state and the city as part of an agreement for a 1976-77 budget of $505-million and for movement toward funding parity with State University, the Council of Presidents urges the Board of Higher Education to move in that direction with appropriate safeguards for maintaining student access."

The $505 million is the amount the university has been saying it needs to function at a retrenchment level next year. Privately, however, Dr. Kibbee has advised the board that the university could survive on a bare-bones budget of $495 or $500 million, after bargaining with the state indicated the original figure was still too high.

The 15-to-4 vote urging tuition included the votes of Dr. Kibbee and of Seymour Hyman, deputy Chancellor, who are members of the council.

A ranking university source identified the presidents who voted against the statement as Edgar D. Draper of Manhattan Community College, Milton G. Bassin of York, William Birenbaum of Staten Island Community, and Edmond V. [unclear] of Richmond College.

Four Whales Are Sighted Close to Ocean City Shore

OCEAN CITY, N.J., May 18 (AP)—The Coast Guard had a whale of a day yesterday with four of the mammals sighted near shore off Ocean City.

One whale, a 15-foot pilot whale, was struggling in the surf within 50 feet of the shore in the afternoon.

Coast Guardsmen and workers from the National Marine Fisheries Service were unable to move the whale off the sand, so a Coast Guard cutter was used to tow it back out to sea.

A second whale was found struggling offshore at night, this time in the shallows of the Great Egg Harbor Inlet.

The whale, swimming under its own power but obviously disoriented, freed itself while a Coast Guard cutter stood by.

Two other whales were sighted near the second as it struggled to free itself, but they stayed safely out at sea.

3 Girls Killed in Fire

FRUITLAND, Wash., May 18 (UPI)—A small wooden house exploded in flames last night, killing three girls, 4 to 7 years old, who were trapped while their mother watched helplessly from outside. The victims were Theresa Sue Scherpf, 7, and her sisters, Spring Lasandra, 5, and Rikki Lynn, 4. Their mother, Susan Smith, 25, was treated for shock at a hospital. Sheriff's officers said the wood stove used to heat the home apparently touched off fumes from gasoline, kerosene and oil stored there.

It also examines the serious and important purposes that annual meetings often serve in these particular times.

All of this provides just another example of the kind of editorial vitality that's given Forbes such a commanding position in the measured reading preferences of America's top management.

Recently, the research firm of Erdos and Morgan, Inc. verified this with a reconfirming study of corporate officer readership—among 1300 of America's largest companies.

Albany Senate Minority Leader Makes Much Out of Almost Nothing

GREENHOUSE
by New York Times Staff

May 18—Anyone to be minority in New York State is prepared to bring out of the chaffed and other trappings a job confers few jobs that really matters. The minority bill nor stop passing. It needs indulgence for offices, even spaces.

Such rare cases as of a Governor's two-thirds the minority have surprised most identified with the reform movement, has to parlay these forces into effect of the 26 political and geographical Senators who Democratic minority surprised has been Senator Ohrenstein. "I couldn't feel any better about the way things have gone," he said in his Capitol office the other day. "I've done more than I ever thought I could."

What he has done basically is to mold his disparate group into a loyal and unified bloc, so that the Senate Democrats have to be reckoned with as a unified conference rather than—as so often in the past—simply individual votes to be bargained away at the leader's convenience.

"At this point Fred is a very strong leader," said Senator Emanuel R. Gold of Queens, who voted for Senator Ohrenstein's opponent, Jeremiah B. Bloom of Brooklyn, in the contest for the minority leadership 17 months ago. "He has to be dealt with, and that means we all have to be dealt with. We all have more respect for ourselves."

According to his members, Senator Ohrenstein won their loyalty first by even-handedness—he ended an ancient practice of doling out staff assignments as a sign of favor or disfavor, and gave every Senator the same $25,000—and then by sharing the information on which he based his decisions.

"The difference is like night and day," said Senator Donald Hilferin of Brooklyn, who also had opposed Senator Ohrenstein for the leadership. "He never gives us something on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. We all have the same information. We all participate." "If I've learned one thing in 16 years here, it's that reward and punishment doesn't work," Senator Ohrenstein says. "Just say exactly what's on your mind, and people will understand."

Veto Is Overridden

The test of this approach came six weeks ago when the Democratic majority in the Assembly, at the height of its feud with the Governor, overrode Mr. Carey's veto of a school aid formula bill. The Assemblymen rushed over to their colleagues in the Senate to plead with them to do the same thing. But the Democratic Senators presented a united front and blocked the overriding of the veto. Members said later that Senator Ohrenstein had simply persuaded them that the veto had been correct.

That incident did not sit well with the Assembly Democratic leadership, which privately accused Senator Ohrenstein of grandstanding to gain the Governor's favor, and of violating an unwritten rule that legislative Democrats stick together.

"Sure he was grandstanding, but that's what politics is about—getting people to pay attention to you," one legislative aide close to the Assembly leadership said the other day.

Senator Ohrenstein, whose manner is almost invariably direct and casual, has long been one of Albany's most accessible and quotable politicians. He will talk politics—his own or someone else's, on the Senate floor or off—as long as someone is there to listen.

The Senator, now 50 years old, traces his fascination with politics to his admiration for Fiorello H. La Guardia, the Mayor of New York when, at the age of 13, Mr. Ohrenstein arrived in Brooklyn with his parents as refugees from Nazi Germany. He acquired his unaccented English in public school and

Museum Will Open Hall of Gems

By BOYCE RENSBERGER

The door to the American Museum of Natural History's new Hall of Minerals and Gems is like the mouth of a fabulous cave.

Inside the new hall, which opens this Friday, it is cool, dark, quiet and the walls and floors are studded with thousands of huge crystals of every color and shape, sparkling under spotlights.

The smaller specimens are behind glass, but a number of bigger ones are out in the open. Among them are a 506-pound topaz from Brazil, a 4.5-ton block of copper ore from Arizona, an amethyst too big to lift, and a 2.5-ton slab of polished jade from Poland.

"We're hoping kids will want to slide down it," Dr. Vincent Manson said of the huge stone, set on a slope. Dr. Manson is a consultant to the museum and in charge of the new hall.

"In fact," he went on, "we want people to touch these specimens, put their arms around them, fall in love with them."

Dr. Manson, conducting a preview of the hall exhibition as workmen bustled about adding final touches, stroked the jade slab with the flat of his hand.

"We want minerals to come across not only as scientific documents but as art objects, as objects of esthetic value that anyone can look at and see the beauties of the earth."

The new hall, covering a third of an acre, is a permanent exhibition that has been planned for in preparation for eight years. It cost $1.5 million, not counting the value of the specimens, which are collectively estimated at around $50 million.

All of the 8,000 specimens on display have been in the museum's collection of 85,000 mineral samples for many years. Many of the most valuable were dredged around the turn of the century by J. Pierpont Morgan. These include many cut and uncut gemstones, many of the specimens were in an unquarred and now closed hall filled with uninspired rows of glass cases and largely overlooked by visitors.

Unlike the typ boxlike exhibit hall, this new one built on many levels with ramped steps and pits and little rooms to the side with specialized exhibit. A visitor can climb up to a dais of small gems or step down into an amphitheater to learn what minerals vary in their properties.

The hall was opened by Fred B. Bookhardt Jr. of firm of William F. Pedersen & Associates.

While most of the minerals are displayed in stilted groupings according to the chemistry, all can be appreciated hetically without regard for the scientific system.

In fact, esthetics clearly the main consideration in the hall.

Beyond a few exceptions, little attempt is made to explain how a spectacularly faceted transparent crystal or a coarsely shaped blob of pure metal may be in an earth that, to us, seems like so much gray rock. Almost nothing is said of the heat and pressure within the earth, the force of colliding continents or eruption of volcanoes, all of which work to form not only the rock but also, in rare little pockets, gems.

All of this more is planned for an adjacent Hall of Earth Processes that will not open for five or 10 years. The two exhibitions together would give visitors a deeper appreciation of what minerals are. But, for now, the beauty of gleaming crystals, products of nature, is enough to captivate the exhibit.

Sandy Nichols, 10, studies topaz from Brazil while Morgan views a display of minerals in the American Museum of Natural History's new Hall of Minerals and Gems. New hall will open Friday.

Reports reaching Addis Ababa said guerrillas seeking independence from Ethiopia for the northern province of Eritrea have stalled the peasant volunteers sent to oppose them. At least one key bridge or more, according to some reports, have been blown up, stranding thousands of the peasants who have been promised land grants in Eritrea. [Page 1, Column 1.]

Israeli border policemen menaced by a crowd of stone-throwing demonstrators in a narrow alley in Jerusalem's Old City opened fire, killing a 21-year-old Arab. As tension rose throughout the former Jordanian part of the city, the victim's funeral was followed by the blockading of a gate to the Old City and the raising of a Palestinian flag atop the walls. Border police broke up the renewed demonstration with riot batons and tear gas. [3:1-2.]

President Ford swept to victory over Ronald Reagan in the Michigan Republican Presidential primary—a vital victory after five losses to the former California Governor. In the Democratic primary, Jimmy Carter, the former Governor of Georgia, and Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona were locked in a close struggle, considered vital for Mr. Udall, who had made a major effort in Michigan to slow what he called Mr. Carter's bandwagon. [1:5-8.]

Top Mine Union Aides Cleared On Charges of Mismanagement

WASHINGTON, May 18 (AP)—Top officials of the United Mine Workers were cleared today by the Labor Department of charges that they had mismanaged the union's finances.

Carl H. Rolnick, acting director of Labor-Management Standards Enforcement, said that auditors had found a number of bookkeeping and accounting errors but "no violations warranting criminal prosecution."

Charges of financial misconduct against the administration of Arnold Miller, U.M.W. president, were filed with the department last November by Mike Trovitch, the union's vice president, and 15 members of the international executive board.

In a letter to the Labor Department, Mr. Trovitch referred to "irregularities in financial expenditures" by Mr. Miller's administration.

"We are not saying anyone stole any money. We want the Government to say that," Mr. Trovitch said at the time.

Mr. Miller's supporters dismissed the charges as political maneuvering by Mr. Trovitch, who has been at odds with the union president since last summer.

In concluding the Labor Department's four-month investigation, Mr. Rolnick said that the union had agreed to put the recommendations in effect immediately and had asked for the department's technical assistance in improving its accounting system.

In addition, he said that Miller administration had asked for assistance in making sure the union's election procedures complied with Federal law.

In a statement, Mr. Miller said he was pleased with the results of the investigation but said, "It is unfortunate that months of U.M.W. staff time and thousands of dollars in coal miners' dues had to be wasted answering trumped-up charges by Mr. Trovitch and the I.F.E. (executive board)."

Instead of using the money for safety and organizing, Mr. Miller said, it was "thrown away in order to assist Government auditors 'pour through the records in order to clear our name.'"

Mr. Trovitch issued a separate statement, saying he was "delighted that as a result of our efforts the Labor Department will insist that corrective action be taken" to improve the accounting procedures.

"Pad" Said to Have Brought $10,000 in Gambling Craft

Three police officers were charged yesterday with having operated an organized "pad" or first indicator system for more than a year, and receiving more than $10,000 for overlooking gambling activities in Harlem.

The three officers, who were assigned to the 28th Precinct, were indicted on conspiracy and bribe-receiving charges by a special grand jury impaneled to hear cases developed by Maurice H. Nadjar, the special state prosecutor investigating corruption in the city's criminal-justice system.

Mr. Nadjar's office has prosecuted several police officers accused of accepting payoffs, but the crimes they were charged with predated the establishment of his office in 1972.

Yesterday's indictments gave the first indication that organized "pads" might still be in existence, although apparently on a smaller scale than previously.

The policemen, who were immediately suspended, are Andrew Amitrano of 56-24 217th Street Bayside, Queens; Chris Gandjos of 53 Ballard Circle, Holbrook, L.I.; and Michael McShane of 1103 Rhineland Avenue, the Bronx.

"A Way of Life"

In its final report in 1972, the Knapp Commission, which investigated police corruption, said: "The pad was a way of life in plainclothes."

In recent interviews Mr. Nadjar and top police officials have said that the many organized pads that existed only a few years ago had largely been eliminated.

The three officers, along with 11 persons charged with bribing them, pleaded not guilty before Justice Leonard H. Sandler of State Supreme Court, who presides over Mr. Nadjar's cases. All were released on their own recognizance.

The person charged with bribery was Charles Banks of 155 West 177th Street; Herman Harris, 120-22 222d Street, Cambria Heights, Queens; Leon Harris, 143-23 181st Place, Springfield Gardens, Queens; Mylles Hurling Jr., 30 West 144th Street; Frank Joyce, 78 West 131st Street; Harvest King, 307 West 117th Street; John McCarden, 117 West 118th Street; Clarence Motem, 821 East 217th Street, the Bronx; James Nurse, 1031 Ward Avenue, the Bronx; James Williams, 2204 Eighth Avenue, and John Williamson, 2100 Tenhout Avenue, the Bronx.

The bribery and bribe-receiving charges carry prison sentences of up to seven years on conviction. The conspiracy charges carry jail terms of up to one year.

According to the indictments, from March 1975 to April 1976, the three policemen "solicited, agreed to accept and accepted" money from individuals "who were engaged in policy or the 'numbers game' upon an agreement and understanding that the defendants would overlook their illegal gambling activities and permit them to operate without harassment."

The indictments said that the officers collected the payoff money "during the course of performing their daily police duties" and that as part of their plan, the officers "agreed to divide the money derived from these 'pads' among themselves and at least one other police officer."

Apparently this officer supplied information to Mr. Nadjar's office or his colleagues. A Nadjar spokesman declined to say whether other police officers were involved. He said the investigation was continuing.

The policemen, who were immediately suspended, are Andrew Amitrano of 56-24 217th Street Bayside, Queens; Chris Gandjos of 53 Ballard Circle, Holbrook, L.I.; and Michael McShane of 1103 Rhineland Avenue, the Bronx.

"A Way of Life"

In its final report in 1972, the Knapp Commission, which investigated police corruption, said: "The pad was a way of life in plainclothes."

In recent interviews Mr. Nadjar and top police officials have said that the many organized pads that existed only a few years ago had largely been eliminated.

The three officers, along with 11 persons charged with bribing them, pleaded not guilty before Justice Leonard H. Sandler of State Supreme Court, who presides over Mr. Nadjar's cases. All were released on their own recognizance.

The person charged with bribery was Charles Banks of 155 West 177th Street; Herman Harris, 120-22 222d Street, Cambria Heights, Queens; Leon Harris, 143-23 181st Place, Springfield Gardens, Queens; Mylles Hurling Jr., 30 West 144th Street; Frank Joyce, 78 West 131st Street; Harvest King, 307 West 117th Street; John McCarden, 117 West 118th Street; Clarence Motem, 821 East 217th Street, the Bronx; James Nurse, 1031 Ward Avenue, the Bronx; James Williams, 2204 Eighth Avenue, and John Williamson, 2100 Tenhout Avenue, the Bronx.

The bribery and bribe-receiving charges carry prison sentences of up to seven years on conviction. The conspiracy charges carry jail terms of up to one year.

According to the indictments, from March 1975 to April 1976, the three policemen "solicited, agreed to accept and accepted" money from individuals "who were engaged in policy or the 'numbers game' upon an agreement and understanding that the defendants would overlook their illegal gambling activities and permit them to operate without harassment."

The indictments said that the officers collected the payoff money "during the course of performing their daily police duties" and that as part of their plan, the officers "agreed to divide the money derived from these 'pads' among themselves and at least one other police officer."

Apparently this officer supplied information to Mr. Nadjar's office or his colleagues. A Nadjar spokesman declined to say whether other police officers were involved. He said the investigation was continuing.

"Pad" Said to Have Brought $10,000 in Gambling Craft

Three police officers were charged yesterday with having operated an organized "pad" or first indicator system for more than a year, and receiving more than $10,000 for overlooking gambling activities in Harlem.

The three officers, who were assigned to the 28th Precinct, were indicted on conspiracy and bribe-receiving charges by a special grand jury impaneled to hear cases developed by Maurice H. Nadjar, the special state prosecutor investigating corruption in the city's criminal-justice system.

Mr. Nadjar's office has prosecuted several police officers accused of accepting payoffs, but the crimes they were charged with predated the establishment of his office in 1972.

Yesterday's indictments gave the first indication that organized "pads" might still be in existence, although apparently on a smaller scale than previously.

Pageantry Marks 'Year of Torah Education'

Jewish scholars and children were joined yesterday by brass bands, clowns and pageantry on floats to make the usually solemn study of the Torah an occasion for joy.

In a parade in the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn, thousands of participants ranging from white-bearded rabbis to little boys in skull caps celebrated what has been proclaimed the Year of Torah Education by the Lubavitcher Rabbi, Menachem M. Schneerson, world leader of the Lubavitcher movement in Hasidism.

Before the parade began, Rabbi Schneerson, talking from a stand at Eastern Parkway and Kingston Avenue, said that all Jews, regardless of sex or age, "must be provided with a Jewish education."

The occasion for the parade, songs and bands was also the holiday known as Lag B'Omer, when it is customary for children to go into fields.

The holiday has been celebrated for 1,900 years to mark the end of a plague in which thousands of Jews died.

As the singing celebrators paraded to their brass bands, the police rerouted traffic along Kingston Avenue, Empire Boulevard and Troy Avenue, where, in an athletic field, a raffle was held.

Last Guest Checks Out of the Commodore Hotel

By CHARLES KAISER

W. J. Schapp, a St. Louis resident who is visiting New York City with his wife and sister-in-law, was startled when he returned to his room at the Commodore Hotel yesterday afternoon and discovered a note ordering him to move out.

The hotel was closing, Mr. Schapp was told at the desk, and at 4:30 P.M. he became the last man to check out of the Commodore, a victim of rising operating losses.

Mr. Schapp, who is on his first visit to New York, called his room at the Commodore "beautiful," but the hotel's operation, the Penn Central Transportation Company, said it was uneconomical, so its 500 remaining employees were thrown out of work yesterday.

Whether the 26-story hotel at Lexington Avenue and 42d Street will reopen as a Hyatt Regency House may depend on the action of the Board of Estimate, which has scheduled a vote tomorrow on Donald Trump's plan to renovate the building.

Mr. Trump, a real estate developer, has proposed a renovation to cost between $77 and $100 million contingent on the granting of substantial tax benefits by the city. Mayor officials said yesterday that the plan had a very good chance of being approved by the Board of Estimate.

"It was good times here when I came here," he said. "Now management is bad—everything is bad."

The employees, who belong to different unions depending on their functions, were not sure yesterday how much severance pay they would receive. Some had been told they would get three days pay for every year they had been employed, others, four days, but all of them were angry because they said they had not received their vacation pay.

One bellman said a march on the Biltmore Hotel's paymaster's office was planned for today at 1 P.M. to protest the lack of vacation pay. The Biltmore is also owned by the Penn Central Transportation Company.

Last Call

In the bar off the lobby, which was remodeled last fall and renamed "New York, New York," Paul Gomez mixed drinks for the last time. At 62, he has been at the Commodore for 30 years. The Commodore itself is 60 years old.

"This bar is a goldmine," he said quietly. "It seems to me these people wanted to dump this hotel for some purpose—it's the best location in New York."

Whether the bar was a goldmine or not, the owners contended that the economic condition of the 1,900-room hotel was a disaster. Last year, according to the company, it lost $1.3 million, and if it had stayed open until the end of this year, it would have lost another $4.6 million.

"We had beautiful people here," said Mrs. Swider. "It felt like home."

Jersey Testimony Discloses Abuses in Parole System

By JOSEPH F. SULLIVAN
Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, May 18—Testimony today about an organized-crime figure who shortened his prison time by two years by writing his own court opinion and mailing it to the warden highlighted the first day of hearings into the New Jersey parole system. Inmates also testified how they had bought their way out of prison on furlough.

Joseph H. Rodriguez, chairman of the State Commission of Investigation, said the four days of hearings would demonstrate that the "inmates were not that smart, but rather, that the system was so riddled with weaknesses that it virtually invited abuse and exploitation."

The abuses were uncovered by the commission and prison officials after several inmates committed crimes, including murder, while on furlough from prison last fall.

The mob figure who was released early on the strength of the bogus Appellate Court opinion was identified as Patrick Pizito, a convicted armed robber who was identified as having ties to the Gambino, Genovese and DeCavalcante Mafia families by Lieut. Carl Sheven- tone of the state police intelligence division.

Mr. Pizito was sent to prison in 1968 to serve a seven-to-10-year sentence for armed robbery and weapons possession and faced an additional 762 days of prison time because he was on parole from an earlier armed robbery conviction when he committed the second offense.

According to the testimony, Mr. Pizito was working in a stereo shop in Hamilton Township under a prison work release program in 1973 when he nor or the whole town; I just obtained copies of legitimate opinions from an employee of the prison classification office in Trenton State Prison and then forged one of his own.

A few days later he asked the employee if his opinion "had arrived yet." Soon thereafter the secretary in the warden's office turned the forged opinion over to the same classification employee who placed it in Mr. Pizito's prison file.

The employee then computed a new prison release date for Mr. Pizito based on the "opinion" that said his parole violation sentence should run consecutively, not consecutively, to the seven to 10 year sentence.

Former and present inmates testified that they had paid $50 and $75 to get furloughs or had heard "through the grapevine" that the two-day and three-day passes were available for sums of up to $300.

The money was paid to other inmates who worked in the prison office. The inmates who received the payoffs were identified during the testimony as Anthony Rizzo and Chico Williams. A commission spokesman said the two men were scheduled to testify tomorrow after grants of immunity from prosecution.

One former inmate, Richard T. Hamilton, testified that he had paid the two men $50 for his first furlough and $75 for his second. When asked why the price had gone up, he answered that the price depended on how much an inmate could raise.

"I would have paid you," he said to the commission attorney who was questioning him. "I would have paid the Govern- ment to get out."

Federal Government to Give Up Landmark in Greenwich Village

By JOSEPH F. FRIED

A huge, federally owned landmark building at 641 Washington Street in Greenwich Village is being given up by the Federal Government, and city officials are drawing up proposals for its use.

As of now, it's in the surplus category and we've offered it to the state and city," Gerald J. Turatsky, regional administrator of the Federal Government's General Services Administration, said of the Federal phase-out. "The city has offered preliminary interest."

Victor Marrero, chairman of the City Planning Commission, said that the Beame administration had asked that the building be turned over to the city.

"We don't have a plan for it yet," he said, but added that his commission supported a concept for the building put forward in a study commissioned by the Landmarks Conservancy.

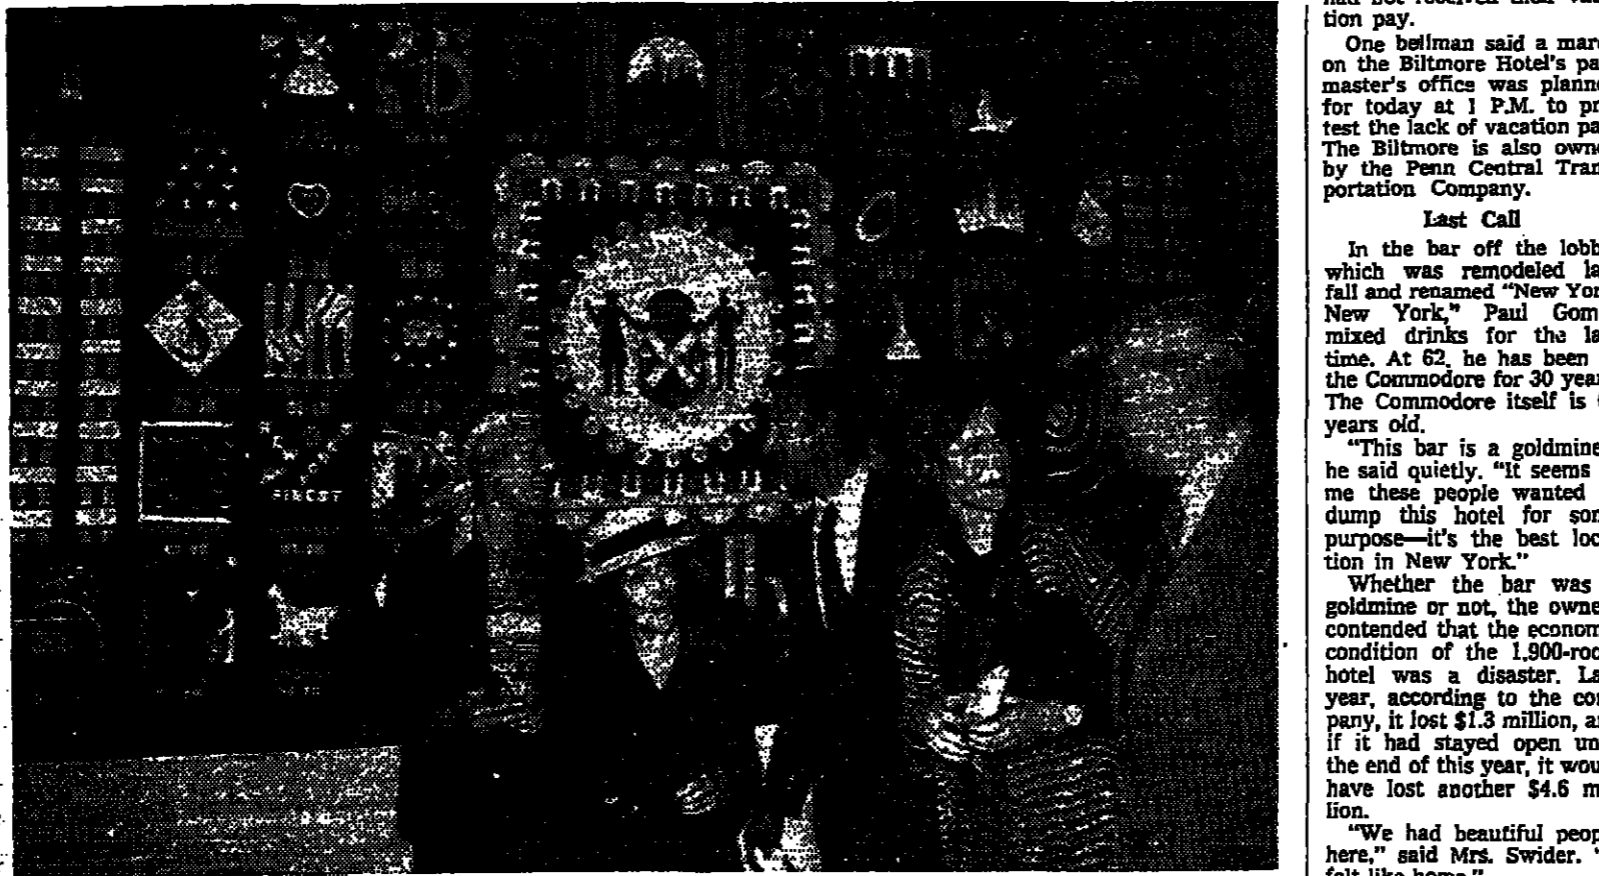

The study envisions a mixed use for the building, which occupies the block bounded by most important Romanesque Revival structures in the city, Washington, Christopher, Barrow and Greenwich Streets. It has been designated an official landmark by the city, and it is also on the Federal complex of community facilities Government's National Register of Historic Places.

- Vote on Hospital Closings Put Off
The board of directors of New York City's Health and Hospitals Corporation put off until noon Friday a vote on whether to reconsider the closing of some municipal hospitals as an economy measure. A report commissioned by the board last week recommended a reversal of the board's decision to close Sydenham Hospital, the Belvue Neighborhood Family Care Center and parts of Gouverneur Hospital. Community opposition to the closings drew renewed strength from the report, but city officials expressed confidence the closings would be carried out. "The report will fall on its merit," said First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti.
- Nassau G.O.P. Faces Extortion Charge
A Floral Park, L.I., widow charged in United States District Court in Brooklyn that the Nassau County Republican Party extorted 1 percent of her annual salary as a county employee for nine years and then dismissed her because she did not make her payments in time and did not make additional contributions. The widow, Dorothy Kowalski, is seeking $500,000 in punitive damages, the 1 percent of her pay she donated over nine years, and full pay since the time of her dismissal in 1974.
- Ex-Convict Charged in Robbery Case
A 27-year-old former convict, accused in 1971 of murdering a 63-year-old woman who lived in Baruch Houses on the Lower East Side, was charged with stealing $20 from a 91-year-old man who lived in the same housing development. The suspect, Paul Flutt of Central Islip, L.I., was paroled from a state prison earlier this year after serving less than four years on a previous robbery conviction. In 1971 he was accused of killing Dinah Applebaum. The murder charge was dropped because the state's key witness, Mrs. Applebaum's daughter, was mentally retarded and unable to testify.
- From the Police Blotter:
Donnie Lacy, 58 years old, of 946 Leggett Avenue, the Bronx, was shot fatally in the chest while going to the aid of his brother, Robert, who was being robbed by five men in a hallway of the victim's apartment house. Mr. Lacy was pronounced dead on arrival at Lincoln Hospital. The robbers escaped.
Henry Hawkins, 35, of the Sunshine Hotel, 241 Bowery, was shot in the right leg by a police officer in a third-floor bathroom of the hotel. A police spokesman said that the officer responded to a call from the hotel that a man was acting erratically. The officer shot the victim after the latter tried to attack him with a knife, the spokesman said.
Ann Luckey, 45, of 42 John Street, Port Richmond, S.I., was arrested for driving while intoxicated after her car crashed into the Zebra Lounge at 585 Targee Street, in the Grymes Hill section, injuring 10 persons slightly, according to the police.

Ford Wins Over Reagan In Crucial Michigan Test particularly members of the United Automobile Workers. In addition, Mr. Carter appeared once again to be the preferred candidate of blacks. He carried Detroit, with its large black population, by about 3 to 2. Mr. Udall, on the other hand, took the Detroit suburbs by a similar margin.

Coleman A. Young, the black Mayor of Detroit, had campaigned energetically for Mr. Carter, while Mr. Udall had been supported by Representative John Conyers Jr., a black Congressman from Detroit.

In late afternoon, long before the polls closed, Mr. Udall said that he had decided not to campaign in the Oregon primary, but that he would campaign in Arkansas, Kentucky, South Dakota, Ohio and New Jersey. He said no decisions had been made as to his effort in the California primary.

Also on the Democratic ballot were former Senator Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma, Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, Sargent Shriver and Ellen McCormack, none of whom campaigned in the state. Mr. Ford and Mr. Reagan were the only Republican contenders.

Although Michigan's delegates to the Democratic and Republican National Conventions will not be selected by party caucuses until next month, the selection is based on the results of the primary. Under party rules, the caucuses are required to allocate the delegates to the candidates proportionally, according to the vote they receive.

The Republicans are to select 24 convention delegates, the Democrats 133.

But it was never the delegate count that was most important in this primary. The importance lay, rather, in the dramatic picture of a President on the defensive in his home state, the "last stand" quality attached to Mr. Udall's campaign, and the psychological impact on Mr. Carter's surge toward the Democratic nomination.

Problem for Candidates

The apparent danger facing all major candidates was rooted in the nature of Michigan's disparate, volatile electorate and the free-for-all nature of the primary itself.

Masses of voters breaking away from the liberal sway of the United Automobile Workers to the moderate-conservative influence of the modern-day Michigan Republican Party, were becoming more independent—and more conservative—by the 1970's. And in 1972, when the school-busing issue was raging here and Mr. Wallace brought his populist-conservative campaign to the state, a new, pivotal force burst on the scene.

That force, including many of the more than 49 percent of Michigan voters who had come to describe themselves as independents, gave Mr. Wallace a 51 percent majority in the 1972 primary. That is the vote that became crucial in the 1976 primary.

Now, as in 1972, the primary is wide open, with unlimited crossover voting permitted. There is no party registration and voters may cast ballots for whatever candidate they want. Crossovers were made easier because there were no state or party contests on today's ballot.

Into this electoral minefield came President Ford, shaken and worried by the way in which Mr. Reagan had ridden the crossover vote in Texas and Indiana and Mr. Carter, who needed to score well among the 1972 Wallace voters, among others, to save off a vigorous challenge by Mr. Udall.

Mr. Udall's major hope was to hold most of the 700,000 voters who cast ballots for three liberal candidates in the 1972 primary, as against 800,000 for Mr. Wallace.

The Ford and Reagan forces sought Democratic crossovers. In Mr. Ford's case, there was a hint of panic about his campaign for a time.

The Michigan Republican organization, one of the most powerful in the country dropped its impartiality and worked for the President.

Mr. Ford made several visits to the state last week, and the climax of his campaign was an old-fashioned whistle-stop tour across the state last weekend on which he appealed to his fellow Michiganders not to let him down.

Abandoning his earlier strategy of countering against Mr. Reagan's thrusts, President Ford took a higher road, emphasizing what he said was his record of peace, prosperity and restoration of trust in government.

Outgunned and outmanned in many ways, the Reagan campaign mounted an intensive radio and television effort. But Mr. Reagan appeared in the state for only a day.

Carter's Strategy

Meanwhile, Mr. Carter, faced with the aggressive "one-on-one" challenge of Mr. Udall, stepped up his campaigning. His strategy was to hold as many of the former Wallace voters as possible in the Democratic fold, but attract as many independents as he could. He also sought to head off Mr. Udall among black voters, and to woo away some liberals.

Mr. Udall carried on the most energetic personal campaign of the primary, stumping Michigan on 10 of the 14 days preceding the election. But his drive was somewhat limited by lack of funds. He reportedly spent $75,000, while hoping to spend $160,000. Mr. Carter reportedly spent $95,000.

Worse, from Mr. Udall's point of view, he watched many powerful figures line up on the side of Mr. Carter, who was perceived as the ultimate winner of the nomination.

First, Mayor Young came out for Mr. Carter and directed energies toward denying Mr. Udall the black vote.

Then the United Automobile Workers freed its political funds for use in the campaign, and most of its top Michigan leaders, including Leonard Woodcock, the union president, endorsed Mr. Carter. So did Tom Turley, a black who heads the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations' council of metropolitan Detroit. Mr. Carter even got kind words from the management side of big industry when Henry Ford 2d said he thought Mr. Carter deserved the nomination.

While these were issues here, Mr. Udall, for example, stressed unemployment and Mr. Reagan nursed his foreign-policy themes relating to détente and the Panama Canal—issues not essentially an "issue" campaign. In this it contrasted sharply with 1972, when the busing issue raised the campaign to a high emotional pitch.

Ford's Aides Assert Reagan's Momentum Is Blunted

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, May 18—President Ford's campaign leaders, exultant over victories in Republican primaries in Michigan and Maryland, said tonight they had blunted Ronald Reagan's momentum but not stopped his challenge.

"It gives us a good shot in the arm," Stuart Spencer, deputy chairman of the Ford campaign, said of the two victories. He quickly added, however, that the President still faced "a very tough fight" to obtain his party's nomination.

The bounds on confidence about Mr. Ford's candidacy were illustrated by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's decision earlier today to cancel planned speeches in California before the primary election.

Robert L. Funseth, the State Department spokesman, said that Mr. Kissinger had decided against appearances in Los Angeles and San Francisco before the June primary because they "could have been perceived" as political.

The decision took some of the edge off the President's success in what he had called a "must win" Michigan primary. It suggested as well that the White House was attempting to minimize the opportunities in the remaining primaries for Mr. Reagan, the President's rival, to make the Secretary of State a campaign target.

Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, said that he did not know any efforts by the President or his aides to dissuade Mr. Kissinger from appearing in California, where Mr. Reagan served as Governor for eight years.

But an official of the President's campaign organization greeted the cancellation of the speaking tour with evident relief, saying that Mr. Kissinger could have been a "sitting duck" for Mr. Reagan in California.

Mr. Kissinger disclosed in a television interview released Sunday that he would "prefer not to stay" in the Cabinet, even if Mr. Ford won a full term. The remark, which left open the possibility that he could be persuaded to remain, was widely interpreted as an attempt to blunt Mr. Reagan's acerbic rhetoric about the Secretary.

Mr. Reagan, who has pledged that he would replace Mr. Kissinger if elected President, had made criticism of the Ford Administration's foreign policies the centerpiece of his challenge, better educated, more worldly, more liberal and more interested in issues than the Carter voters. Asked whether they preferred a candidate with specific programmatic proposals or one who stressed the restoration of morality to government, the Democratic voters split neatly into two groups: programmatic-Udall and morality-Carter.

Mr. Ford's recovery in Michigan was evident in comparing the results there with those in neighboring Indiana, a somewhat more conservative state, where Mr. Reagan won the primary on May 4 for his first Northern victory.

In Indiana, Mr. Ford won only a narrow margin among self-identifying Republicans and lost among the independents. He was far stronger among both groups in the voting in his home state.

The President's Michigan showing would seem to augur well for his prospects in Ohio and New Jersey, the final two industrial states to vote, on June 8. Mr. Reagan, with the home-turf advantage that seemingly aided Mr. Ford yesterday, leads in California, which also votes that day. In the nine relatively small states that vote between now and then, the California is believed to hold an advantage, but the President's comeback last night may enable him to pull off an upset, or two.

Only one issue appeared to hurt Mr. Ford severely in Michigan, and that was the one which Mr. Reagan has been scoring him in other states. The President could eke out only a bare majority among those in the poll who agreed that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger had "conceded too much" to the Soviet Union.

Those on both sides of every other question in a long series of queries on issues went solidly for the incumbent in Michigan, at least; issues were not much on the voters' minds.

About half the voters in the Republican primary were Republicans, about 15 percent Democrats, the rest independents.

As he had in the Illinois primary on March 16 and as he had failed to do since, while Mr. Reagan won five out of six contests between them, President Ford ran strongly in Michigan among most demographic groupings and among those on both sides of most major issues. That pattern suggested that his favorite son status had aided him considerably.

The Times/CBS News poll also showed that Mr. Reagan's image as a party splitter had hurt him. Almost half the Republican voters expressed concern about the problem, and they gave Mr. Ford more than 85 percent of their votes. Those who were not worried by divisiveness went narrowly for the California conservative.

Among the Democrats, Mr. Carter apparently benefited from organizational support in Michigan and suffered for the lack of such backing in Maryland, where the Democratic old guard headed by Gov. Marvin Mandel went all out for Mr. Brown.

But Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona, carrying the stop-Carter colors in Michigan, managed despite an almost empty treasury and a loser's image to make a tight race of it by running strongly among the independent voters.

Rank-and-file members of the United Automobile Workers, the largest and most influential union in the state, followed the lead of their president, Leonard Woodcock, in supporting the Georgian. Mr. Carter got almost two-thirds of the U. A. W. votes, which comprised an astonishing 30 percent of the total, while losing among other union members.

in Nebraska and squeaked by in Connecticut last Tuesday. Mr. Carter still holds a substantial lead in total delegates; despite his loss in Maryland, he was gaining more delegates there than anyone else because Mr. Brown entered no state. But he will find it increasingly difficult to argue that he is "unstoppable," and thus to attract uncommitted leaders to his banner, unless he can win several of next week's six primaries.

Substantial Crossovers

Democrats and independents crossed over in substantial numbers to vote in yesterday's Michigan Republican primary, as the White House had feared.

By a narrow margin, the Democrats preferred Mr. Reagan, but the far more numerous independents—the key element in most recent Michigan elections—chose the local boy, President Ford, by almost 2 to 1. Their support, combined with the President's overwhelming success among Republicans, who gave him three-quarters of their votes, was enough to avert the home-state embarrassment Mr. Ford had so feared.

It appeared probable that when the final Michigan and Maryland results were tabulated, Mr. Ford and Mr. Reagan would stand roughly even in delegate strength, counting both pledged delegates and those leaning one way or the other although technically uncommitted.

Interviews by The New York Times and CBS News with some 1,600 voters as they left their polling places indicated that many of those who gave George C. Wallace of Alabama a landslide 51 percent of the vote in the 1972 Democratic primary stayed at home yesterday. Others may have voted but refused to admit for unknown reasons that they had supported the Alabamian.

Of the 24 percent of this year's electorate that professed to have backed Mr. Wallace in 1972, about half voted in the Republican primary and about half in the Democratic primary, Mr. Reagan, who had sought to knock the President out of the race with an upset in Michigan, got two-thirds of the Wal-lace backers who chose a Republican ballot, but they were less numerous than he hoped.

1,600 VOTERS POLLED IN MICHIGAN SURVEY

The New York Times and CBS News polled about 1,600 Michigan voters yesterday as they left the polling places. Of these, about 900 were Republicans and about 700 were Democrats.

Twenty voting precincts were chosen in the state, and within each precinct each voter had an equal chance of being selected.

One possible source of error in a survey such as this is sampling error. One can say with 95 percent certainty that results based upon the entire sample differ by no more than 7 points, in either direction, from what would have been obtained by interviewing all voters in Michigan. For Republicans and Democrats alone, the margin of error would be 8 to 9 points.

However, as in any survey of public opinion, this margin of error is undoubtedly somewhat larger because of unavoidable imperfections in the way the survey was constructed and because some voters refused to be interviewed.

The Times/CBS News poll also showed that Mr. Reagan's image as a party splitter had hurt him. Almost half the Republican voters expressed concern about the problem, and they gave Mr. Ford more than 85 percent of their votes. Those who were not worried by divisiveness went narrowly for the California conservative.

Among the Democrats, Mr. Carter apparently benefited from organizational support in Michigan and suffered for the lack of such backing in Maryland, where the Democratic old guard headed by Gov. Marvin Mandel went all out for Mr. Brown.

But Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona, carrying the stop-Carter colors in Michigan, managed despite an almost empty treasury and a loser's image to make a tight race of it by running strongly among the independent voters.

Rank-and-file members of the United Automobile Workers, the largest and most influential union in the state, followed the lead of their president, Leonard Woodcock, in supporting the Georgian. Mr. Carter got almost two-thirds of the U. A. W. votes, which comprised an astonishing 30 percent of the total, while losing among other union members.

As he had in the Illinois primary on March 16 and as he had failed to do since, while Mr. Reagan won five out of six contests between them, President Ford ran strongly in Michigan among most demographic groupings and among those on both sides of most major issues. That pattern suggested that his favorite son status had aided him considerably.

A Satisfied $25 Winner To Get at Least $10,000

Special to The New York Times
TRENTON, May 18—When Herbert Fannell of Brooklyn cashed in his winning New Jersey lottery ticket May 3, he did not know just how lucky he was.

Mr. Fannell, a 56-year-old clerk for the New York City Transit Authority, held a winner in the April 22 lottery, and had cashed it routinely at the Paper Boutique in Hoboken. He received $25.

The state lottery computer, checking winning tickets on Monday, rejected the $25 payoff Mr. Fannell had received.

Mr. Fannell had actually qualified for the Jersey Jackpot drawing to be held Thursday at Town Hall in Guttenburg. The minimum prize in that drawing is $10,000, and the maximum is $250,000. The other prizes are $25,000 and $50,000. Everybody who holds a winner from the April 22 lottery will qualify for one of these prizes.

In Larchmont, the Issue Is Taxes, Not Politics

By JAMES FERON... LARCHMONT, N.Y.—Roy Eney, who owns the seed store with Tom Carino in the center of this suburban community, says that a customer mentioned recently that he was impressed with Jimmy Carter. "It surprised me," Mr. Eney said across his cluttered counter, "not because he liked Carter—I'm leaning a bit that way myself—but because it was the first political comment I've heard in this shop in some time." Like the early blooms of spring that are sending cus-

Roy Eney, right, and Tom Carino in their store. "Politics? Sure, people will give you an opinion if you ask," Mr. Eney said, "but prices, and taxes, those are more important."

This is another in a series of articles on voter attitudes in four American communities—urban, small city, suburban and rural—that will appear from time to time during the 1976 campaign. tomers into Mr. Eney's shop, the national political contest is showing signs of life here. That interest could not compete with the local school budget election, of course, but people were beginning to talk about the candidates. They were also still interested in costs. A tall, gaunt man dressed in working clothes entered the store to buy two dozen tomato plants. He was evidently a laborer, and Mr. Eney, who knew the man, did some quick multiplication before giving him a price that appeared to be somewhat under the going rate. The man pursed his lips. Mr. Eney reduced the price by 50 cents and the man smiled, paid and left. "Politics? Sure, people will give you an opinion if you ask," Mr. Eney said, "but prices, and taxes, those are more important. We're selling tomato plants, plenty of them, and people come in from surrounding communities to buy collards, mustard and turnip seeds, and they buy them in bulk."

example, to discover that some of the services previously subsidized by town and village appropriations would now come out of members' pockets because the local governments were finding it difficult to make ends meet. The members, who paid $7 bus fares for a trip to the Catskill Mountain area that was once free and will probably cost $15 the next time, were busy last week preparing arts and crafts for a fair whose proceeds, they decided this year, would go to the center. Heide Stearne, who has long been active in a host of village and county affairs, was asked about national politics. She said she was a Republican who voted for Senator George McGovern in 1972 "because I couldn't stand Nixon" and who is a "bit worried" this year about Mr. Carter. "He contradicted himself twice at a League of Women Voters panel before the New York primary," she remembered. Representative Morris K. Udall won handily among Westchester and Larchmont, Democrats in that primary. Mrs. Stearne said that Mr. Carter is a "fresh and different face, but one must look behind the face. Does he have what it takes to be President? I don't know. I'd have more confidence in [Senator Frank] Church or Udall," she said. Mrs. Stearne said that she would make up her mind after the conventions, a decision that many Larchmont residents expressed when asked who they favored. A good many seemed weary by the primaries. At Anderson's Book Shop there seemed to be little interest in finding out about the candidate. William Buschel, the owner, said "Books on the current political characters, if I can use that term, are considerably less popular than those of others in the past." "We're doing well with Adlai Stevenson and the big book on the Rockefellers," he said, "but we have two on George Wallace and haven't sold one, while the paperback biography of Ronald Reagan that the publisher rushed out is not going well and I don't see much movement on the Carter book," he said. "We've sold a few copies of the book on President Ford," Mr. Buschel said, "but in general people are more interested in the political has-beens. Perhaps they're surfeited with politics. I think a lot are fed up with the primaries."

Strauss to Quit After the Democratic Convention

WASHINGTON, May 18 — Robert S. Strauss, the Democratic national chairman, said today that he expected to give up his party leadership post after the July convention but would remain available for any kind of political service the Presidential nominee might suggest. Mr. Strauss told a reporters' breakfast that he assumed that Jimmy Carter or any other Democratic nominee would want to put his own political advisers in charge of the party machinery for the general election. "The last day of the convention, my term is up," the chairman declared, "and I'm going to tell the nominee: 'I'll do anything you want me to do to help get you elected, and I hope it's carrying my district in Dallas." There have been reports that Mr. Carter told campaign aides he would replace Mr. Strauss if he were nominated at New York City. The chairman noted that party rules automatically created a vacancy in his job after the convention but indicated he would stay on if asked. Asked if he would rather see the Democratic candidate run against President Ford or Ronald Reagan, Mr. Strauss said it was a case of "Twiddle dee and Twiddle dum" because "the tone and pace of the Republican campaign has already been set." The Democratic official said the President had hurt himself

To Find a Real Charcuterie, You Don't Need to Go to France

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE
Special to The New York Times

EAST HAMPTON, L. I.—Although New York City boasts with considerable reason that it is one of the world's greatest resources for gastronomic treasures, there has, nonetheless, over the years been a conspicuous lack in one area.

An enigma we have pondered for many, many years is the absence of a fine charcuterie. We have found this a painful lack.

What is charcuterie? It is one of the chief, delectable arts of the French kitchen. The word derives, as Jane Grigson so happily points out in her excellent work, "The Art of Charcuterie" (Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., 1969), from chair cuit meaning cooked meat, principally, if not exclusively, of the pig.

Terrines, Too

She adds that the trade of the charcutier goes back "at least as far as the time of classical Rome, where a variety of sausages could be bought, as well as the famous hams from Gaul." The world of charcuterie embraces, in addition to hams, such delicacies as terrines and pâtés, white sausages, blood sausages and, of course, andouilles and andouillettes.

It will be a year next month that what is perhaps the best and most enduring shop for charcuterie opened with small fanfare in Greenwich Village (and, most recently, a second shop on 62d Street). It is called Les Trois Petits Cochons or The Three Little Pigs and is the enterprise of two young Frenchmen who gave New York this gift almost by accident. At least their ambitions lay in other directions.

The young chefs are Jean-Pierre Pradie, 31 years old, a native of Bordeaux, and Alain Sinturel, 28, of Paris.

Another Ambition

"What we really had in mind," Mr. Pradie said recently, as he sliced into a most engaging bit of charcuterie of his own invention, a terrine Normande made with pork and apples and calvados, "was to open a restaurant. Trouble is, we didn't have the funds."

"We met in London," his partner added, as he chopped a bit of aspic to garnish a platter that also included a duck pâté with Grand Marnier and another duck pâté scented with cognac and flavored with truffes.

"I'd never worked as a professional chef before, although I had graduated from the hotel school in Lausanne, Switzerland. After that I'd joined the sales department of a hotel chain in Paris—they owned places like the Loria and the Scriba. As things turned out, Jean-Pierre and I took a long tour of Africa, north and south, east and west, and we spoke often of going into the restaurant business together.

"When we met again in New York, we discussed it but capital was scarce. So we decided it would take far fewer funds to open a small place that didn't require a large overhead and a large staff. Or that's what we thought at the time."

Neither Jean-Pierre nor Alain had vast experience in the art of pâtés and terrines, but they did painstaking, voluminous research in all the pertinent manuals they could get their hands on and accepted the advice of friends in the local world of chefdom. To this day, particularly with two establishments in operation, a 16-hour work day is not uncommon.

We have long admired the products turned out in their ovens. (We celebrated last New Year's Eve at an extensive bash where their terrines, white sausages and grilled boudins were the talk of the party), but we had never met them before they came to our house to demonstrate their talents by making such diverse items as an engaging platter of hot mussels broiled on the half shell with a sort of small butter, a fine, piping hot dish of crepes filled with seafood and baked in a lobster sauce, plus, of course, an introduction to the meal consisting of their assorted and choice charcuterie.

We were much amused when, as the assembled company ate their various pâtés, Jean-Pierre practiced abstinence.

"For the last year I have been surrounded by nothing but ground meat, cognac and truffes. I haven't touched a pâté for the pleasure of dining in the last six months," he confided.

Les Trois Petits Cochons is in Greenwich Village at 17 East 13th Street (telephone 255-3844) and uptown at 308 East 62d Street (telephone 826-7048). The addition to the elaborate assortment of foods, including bass Duglère (6 tions), coulibias with a sauce $ per portion, veal Orloff (8 tions) and duck ($4.75 per portion) of the pâtés are gies from about

Moules Farcies

- 3 pounds mussels
- 1/2 teaspoon anise seeds
- Freshly ground pepper to taste
- 1/2 pound butter at room temperature
- 1/2 cup chopped parsley
- 2 teaspoons finely chopped shallots

1 teaspoon finely chopped garlic

- Salt to taste
- 1 teaspoon Ricard, Pernod or another anise-flavored liqueur
- 2 tablespoons bread crumbs

1. Scrub the mussels well and place them in a heavy kettle with a tight-fitting cover. Add the anise seeds and pepper. Do not add liquid. Cover and let them steam five minutes or just until all the mussels are open. Shake the kettle as the mussels cook. Set aside briefly to cool.

2. Drain and reserve for another use or discard the cooking liquid.

3. Preheat the broiler to high.

4. Remove the mussels from the shell and reserve half the shells for stuffing. Pull away and discard the tough, rubbery band that surrounds each mussel. Replace one mussel in each shell and arrange the shells on a baking dish.

5. Melt the butter and add the remaining ingredients except the bread crumbs. Spoon equal amount of the butter mixture over each mussel. Sprinkle the mussels with bread crumbs. Run under the broiler until the butter is bubbling and the mussels are piping hot.

Yield: 6 to 8 servings.

- 1 one-and-one-quarter-pound live lobster
- 6 tablespoons butter
- 1/2 cup finely chopped shallots
- 1/2 cup plus 1 tablespoon cognac
- 1 clove garlic, finely minced
- 2 1/2 tablespoons tomato paste
- 1/2 cup dry white wine

- 1/2 pound squid, cut into small pieces (optional)
- 1/2 pound shrimp, shelled, deveined, cut into small pieces

1. Prepare the crepes, stack them and keep covered.

2. Split the lobster in half. Break off the claws and crack them. Remove and discard the tough sac near the eyes of the lobster. Remove the coral and liver from the carcass and set aside.

3. Heat half the butter in a heavy skillet and add the lobster tail, the claws and the carcass pieces. Sprinkle with shallots and cook over high heat, stirring, until lobster shell turns bright red. Add the one-quarter cup cognac and flame it. Add the garlic and tomato paste, stirring. Add the wine, fish stock, parsley, bay leaf, thyme, salt and pepper to taste. Cook about 10 minutes, stirring occasionally.

4. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.

5. Remove the lobster pieces and when cool enough to handle, remove the meat from the tail and claws and set aside. Chop the lobster shell coarsely and add it to a food processor or put it through the coarse blade of a meat grinder. Blend or grind coarsely. Return this to the sauce and cook about five minutes longer.

6. Blend the coral and liver with two tablespoons of butter and the flour. Stir this, bit by bit, into the sauce. Add the cream and bring to the boil. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and put the mixture through a fine sieve.

Halston's Groupies: 'Sweetcakes'

By ANGELA TAYLOR

towel made by Fieldcrest and a scarf autiful," he explains, "and they're ing to do it," he says. "As chief exe officer of Halston Enterprises, I'm -man band."

Halston Frowick, one realizes, is as truck as any teen-ager eating pop-at the Bijou movie in a Middle West-own. He was born in Des Moines, in Evansville, Ind., and is as Amer-is corn on the cob. Even in his black er and slacks and those weird shades, y in his mirrored office with orchids ng in pots on his mirrored desk, he manages to look like the boy next he has a public which is North, East, and West," he explains. He does not with any one woman in mind, but men. From his 72-year-old mother to Minnelli. And Elizabeth Taylor?

Yes, indeed, he answers, smiling with perfect teeth at the mention of the newest of the sweetcakes. "We have such report," he continues. "We're made for each other. I'm in love with her."

She wore his strapless dress to the Academy Awards hoopla, and was watched avidly by millions of women. And then again, there she was in Washington, all bubbly bosom popping out of a Halston décolletage, with the lad himself at her elbow.

He relates how they finally met. An executive of the awards asked Halston to make a dress for her, and he insisted she'd have to come to New York. And then she telephoned, personally.

"She said 'Is this really Halston? and I said 'Is this really Elizabeth Taylor?' and I suggested a strapless dress—which is flattering to any woman with good shoulders," he explained. He was busy, but she was persuasive and finally he said, "Only for you, I'll come to California."

A Round of Parties
They went to the awards together and then to a round of Hollywood parties.
"She's royalty," he says, and one can almost hear a "gee whiz" in the tone of his voice. They are the same age, 44, he points out.

The well-known Taylor figure has not been thought of as a designer's dream, and her taste in clothes has often been criticized. Her new cavalier defends her.

"That's because she's been too much in European clothes that are overpowering," he explains. "I find her to have a terrific
has a small waist and hips and beautiful legs. What we've done is pare things down.
We're making 60- to 70 dresses for her."

The empress of the violet eyes is off to Iran to visit other royalty, and in the meantime, there are thousands of other women—affluent Miss Americas, Halston calls them—who are waiting for the word from the most popular home-bred designer this country has ever known. He won't disappoint them.

What is the Halston mystique? Why do red-head-like young women like Marisa Berenson and statuesque dowagers like Mary Lasker adore him equally? A sense of reality about what women really look like, which he learned when they came to buy his hats at Bergdorf Goodman. He had them in mind when he flattered them with loose caftans when he covers their lean-then-perfect attributes with winglike sleeves of chiffon in the most delicious colors he can find.

All Kinds of Figures

"People make you," he says. "I have no ideal woman. We have suggestions for every figure type. After all, Americans come from every ethnic group, have every kind of figure. Most American women are under 5 foot 4. I'd say 90 percent of my customers wear bras."

"We've eased the mood of fashion," he continues. "Women are round, not hard edge. The caftan did the most for every woman, especially the heavier woman."

The asymmetrical neckline in his new collection is another example of universal flattery: it succeeds in baring and covering at the same time. It was difficult to work out, Halston says.

The collection also contained 17 pieces in Ultrasuede. Isn't he tired of it?

"Ultrasuede sells," he says firmly. "The consumer loves it. I show it in depth because she does. There's a buying public out there whom I don't know personally. They like it. I'm not cutting myself out of that market."

Why should he? What has made Halston the hottest name on a design label is that he gives each woman what she wants. Or better yet, that intuitively he knows what she wants even before she has realized it herself.

That's what brings in the Sweetcakes.
"You are only as good as the people you dress," Halston says.

SHOP TALK

Pastime Imported From British Pubs

By LAWRENCE VAN GELDER

The point of just about everything in the tiny shop at 30 East 20th Street is darts. In fact, as its name states, it is Darts Unlimited, which is, to these shores, what an emporium devoted to baseball equipment would be in London's Haymarket.

By and large, the wares come from England, where tossing up a few darts has long been an accompaniment to tossing down a few drinks in the local. And, according to Bob McLeod, who owns Darts Unlimited with his wife, Ruth, darts is growing by leaps and bounds in the United States. Mr. McLeod should know whereof he speaks. He is also the president of the United States Darts Association and his store is a clearing house of information about the sport.

Darts Unlimited boasts more than 100 models of darts ($4.80-$5 for a set of three), ranging in weight from 13 to 45 grams in the three basic barrel configurations—with weight distributed forward, with weight distributed evenly throughout, and with the weight concentrated in the middle. Some barrels are smooth; others knurled.

In addition, the store offers a colorful array of flights or feathers, taken from domestic turkeys, processed in England and returned whence they came. There are also shafts; wallets to enable peripatetic darters to carry their principal equipment with them; professional-style fiber dart boards ($31.95); Lucite scoreboards ($18.95); rule books (50 cents); cabinets in various styles for concealing dart boards; and mats delineating the prescribed distance for proper play ($28.95-$39.95).

Darts Unlimited is open Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday from 11 A.M. to 5:30 P.M.; on Thursday from 11 A.M. to 7 P.M. and on Saturday from 11 A.M. to 4 P.M. Telephone: 533-8884.

Another import from England—war gaming—has also given rise to a specialized store. Its name is the Compleat Strategist, and an inspection of its premises reveals that old soldiers neither die nor fade away; they simply turn up as characters in a fairly new pastime that tests wits and offers the opportunity to change history.

The games here fall into two types—board games completely made up; and rule book games that require the creation of appropriate terrain and figurines to represent the troops and equipment involved.

In the former category, the Compleat Strategist offers such $5 games as "Charlot: Tactical Warfare in the Biblical Age, 3,000-500 B.C." and "Viking: Tactical Warfare in the Dark Ages."

There are selections for those whose interest in the evolution of destruction ends with the musket and pike. There is an opportunity to refigure the American Revolution; Napoleon's campaigns; World War II in general; Stalingrad in particular, or the North Atlantic campaign; the Battle of Britain or to take on Erwin Rommel in North Africa.

Napoleon's campaigns and World War II are said to be the most popular among war gamers, who fall generally into the 15-to-35 age bracket.

But some cerebral fighters may prefer to refigure Trafalgar, to play "Verdun: The Game of Attrition" or to re-live (or die) Richtigofen's War.

For those whose pusillanimity is simply out of this world, there are what are known as fantasy games, revolving around J.R.R. Tolkien's imaginations. Many of the same campaigns found in the board games are the subject of rule book games, but the necessity of creating a playing field has prompted the store to stock miniature soldiers and material, paints for adorning them; and myriad books on costuming to insure the correctness of regalia.

And, if it all seems too much trouble, the Compleat Strategist, which is at 11 East 33d Street, offers plain old-fashioned chess sets, too. The store is open from 10:30 A.M. to 6 from Monday through Saturday, with the exception of Thursday, when it is open until 9. Telephone 685-3880.

A Restaurant Where Women Aren't Snubbed by Waiters

Special to The New York Times
LOS ANGELES — Colleen McKay sat hunched over a glass of white wine and searched for the words to explain why she had abandoned a promising career in advertising and risked her life savings to launch a feminist restaurant that is teetering on the edge of bankruptcy.

"Take those two women," she said softly, pointing to two middle-aged housewives enjoying an omelet and conversing quietly. "Do you think that they could get first-class treatment in any other restaurant? Why, no maitre d' or waiter would bother with them. They would get the worst table and would be whisked out the minute they put down their forks."

Now almost two years old, the Los Angeles Women's Saloon and Parlor has attracted hundreds of women who use it as a place to meet friends or entertain business clients. About 10 percent of the customers are men, many of whom are employed at a nearby hospital and like the hearty food and unpretentious decor.

Implicit Hierarchy
"Many feminists have talked about changing the work place but few have done so," explained Miss McKay. "By eliminating the hierarchy implicit in most businesses and by giving women employees the opportunity to be themselves, we think we have gone a long way toward making it possible for them to be feminists on the job."

All of the 14 employees participate in the major decisions, although those who are experts in cooking or marketing make day-to-day decisions in these areas. The dirty work is divided so that nobody gets stuck scrubbing the floor every day.

Another difference is wages. Unlike most other Los Angeles restaurants, which pay their waitresses next to nothing and encourage them to smile, flirt, and ingratiate themselves to customers in hopes of getting large tips, the Los Angeles Women's Saloon and Parlor pays all of its employees $3 an hour.

"I don't feel like I'm an automaton here," said Pody Molina who worked as a waitress at other restaurants in Los Angeles. "Other restaurants make you wear ridiculous costumes or walk with a silly grin on your face. Male managers permit and sometimes even encourage customers to insult or mistreat waitresses. Here no matter what job we do we are treated with respect."

Most customers are sympathetic to the needs of the staff. If the waitresses are busy, they will get their own silverware or help themselves to a second cup of coffee. One night a group of regular customers did all the cooking and cleaning so that the staff could have a night off.

Eating dinner in a feminist restaurant is a consciousness-raising experience because it makes women realize that for years headwaiters have re-created the woman dining alone as a pariah to be shunned off to the worst table or regarded her as a seductress who has come to the restaurant in search of a man instead of a good dinner," said Barbara Clarchile, a frequent customer. "Even in the best of restaurants, women are treated as inferiors who don't know their own minds. They are never asked to order or select the wine. No matter what the woman's professional status or business connections, she never gets the check."

Economic Problems
The menu reflects feminist positions. There are no diet drinks or low-calorie specials because the restaurant does not want to offend its overweight woman clients. The restaurant serves crab quiche and vegetarian meatloaf, but avoids dishes with grapes and lettuce because it supports the farm workers in California.

Such positions are difficult for the Los Angeles Women's Saloon to compete with other restaurants. "Nine out of 10 waitresses in Los Angeles are the first year," said McKay, "but we're lucky to survive." Miss McKay says she has spent $18,000 on the restaurant, which is a Persian-style rug lounge chairs and the walls the Women's Saloon a college coffee he but had to employ because there were not enough female plumbers to go. "Men are very of our restaurant McKay. "The lounge we faced nearby church to prevent us 3. liquor, he claimed that we had moral in the community."

- 1/4 teaspoon vanilla
- 1 cup heavy cream
- 1. Break the chocolate into pieces and add them to a heavy saucepan. Add the butter and rum and place over low heat, stirring often until chocolate melts and the mixture is blended.
- 2. Meanwhile, separate the eggs and add three yolks to a mixing bowl. Place the whites in another bowl in the refrigerator. Set the remaining yolks aside for another use.
- 3. Add six tablespoons of sugar to the yolks and place the bowl over lightly simmering water. Beat vigorously with a wire whisk until the yolks are thickened and pale yellow in color. Add the vanilla. Stir this mixture into the chocolate.

4. Beat the whites with three table-spoons of sugar. Beat until stiff peaks form. Fold this into the chocolate mixture, using a rubber spatula.
5. Beat the cream until stiff with the vanilla. Fold this into the chocolate mixture. Spoon and scrape into a crystal bowl. Refrigerate. Yield: 8 to 10 servings.

About New York

Her Majesty and His Honor

By TOM BUCKLEY

"I hope she can hear me," the 5-foot Mayor Beame quipped before presenting a gift on behalf of the city to the 6-foot Queen Margarethe II of Denmark.

That was at Monday's luncheon for the Queen and her consort, Prince Henry, at the Museum of the City of New York.

The gift was a porcelain statuette of a drummer boy in the Continental Army. It and the city's Bicentennial Medal, which was presented to the Prince, were left behind inadvertently when the royal couple departed.

Examining the statuette, curious guests discovered that it had been made in Copenhagen.

Before the start of the luncheon, while the 110 guests sipped cocktails in the entrance hall of the pleasant Georgian brick building on Fifth Avenue, the Queen and the Prince were shown an exhibition of photographs of the Lower East Side slums taken at the turn of the century by Jacob Riis.

As one of the few Danes to have achieved any great degree of fame in this country, Riis's name was invoked repeatedly during the luncheon speeches, as it has been throughout the Queen's visit to the city, which ends today.

Another name bandied about was that of Jonas Bronk, a Dane who worked as a trade official for the Dutch settlers of New Amsterdam, bought a farm on the Harlem River and eventually was memorialized in the naming of the borough.

Coincidentally, the only Danish journalist at the luncheon, Szen Sabro, a rosy-cheeked 70-year-old columnist for a Copenhagen newspaper, was introduced as the son of Peter Sabro, the Jacob Riis of Denmark.

"At the same time that Riis was investigating the conditions of the poor in your city, Peter Sabro was crusading against the harsh life of the Danish rural poor," said Bent Skov, the press counselor of the Danish Embassy in Washington.

"The Queen knew all about Jacob Riis," Joseph Veach Noble, the director of the museum, said later. "It turned out that she had seen 'The Family of Man' photographic show in Europe years ago. One of the prints in our exhibition had been included in it, and she recognized it immediately. Fortunately, I had boned up on Riis and could respond intelligently."

Margarethe, a charmingly poised young woman, hid her reddish-brown hair under a turban of blue and gold, which set off the brilliant blue of her eyes and matched the colors of her dress. In keeping with the traditional modesty of the Danish royal house, which dates back 1,000 years, she did not dazzle the luncheon dressed with crown jewels.

She and her husband, a French nobleman by birth, stood at the head of the curving staircase as the guests filed by to be presented by the elegant Angier Biddle Duke, a former Ambassador to Spain and Denmark, who is the city's Commissioner of Public Events.

One guest who confused "Your Majesty," which is the Queen's style, with "Your Royal Highness," which is the Prince's, apologized later to Mr. Duke.

"Oh, that's nothing," he said, "I once called him Prince Philip."

Caterers set up 11 tables for 10 persons each in the museum's Silver Gallery on the second floor, facing the park. The luncheon—vichyssoise, filet mignon and fresh strawberries accompanied by a modest rose and a modest champagne for toasting purposes—was paid for, in view of the city's financial stringency, by the honorary commissioners of public events.

Seated at the Queen's right was Louis Auchincloss, lawyer-novelist of the city's haute monde and president of the museum's board of trustees.

The small talk of the Queen, who speaks flawless English as well as several other languages and who studied at universities all over Europe, was not so small as it often is with royalty, said Mr. Auchincloss.

"We discussed her forbear, Margarethe I," he said. "I called her a rather happier Mary Stuart, since she ruled over Denmark, Norway and Sweden and Mary Stuart ruled England, France and Scotland."

Also seated at the table were the Mayor, former Mayor Robert F. Wagner and

Tramway Gets First Paying Passer

By WARREN HOGUE

As the Roosevelt Island cable car lifted out of the morning fog yesterday, Dr. Arthur Schwartz put a nervous question to Tommy Barnes, the operator.

"You have made many trips on this already?" the Manhattan doctor asked, his voice rising in concert with the cabin.

"I've been operating this since March," Mr. Barnes, a laid-off police officer now wearing the blue uniform of Diana Goldin, the wife of the Comptroller.

"My pretty niffed that I was placed here and he's off in left field some place," said Mrs. Goldin, who has a staff job at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Her boss, Thomas Hoving, was seated in a corner of the room with two of the honorary commissioners, Thomas Phipps and Jerry Brunell, the president of Aufbau, the German language newspaper, and Dr. Troels Varming, the royal physician.

Mr. Skov said that during the visit here, virtually every member of the royal party had been afflicted at one time or another with a sore throat.

After the Queen and the Prince departed, a jolly Democrat reported that Dr. William J. Ronan, the chairman of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey and his wife had committed a serious act of lese majesty.

a tramway attendant, said with confidence.

The hour was 6 A.M., and Mr. Barnes was piloting the first paying passengers to Roosevelt Island on the new $6.8 million aerial cable system, inaugurated formally by Mayor Beane the day before.

A small knot of people seeking personal involvement with history had begun to gather at 5:15 A.M. at the end of the ramp covered with a narrow blue awning leading up to the platform of the Manhattan station. A fluorescent tube running the length of the platform glowed in the clammy mist, lending a surreal atmosphere to the setting.

First through the turnstiles was Claudia Nelson, an 11-year-old who has spent much of her young life crossing from one island to another—she lives in both Manhattan and England.

Dressed in a navy blue flannel skirt, high white cotton socks, loafers and a bright yellow slicker, the blond youngster was accompanied by her mother, Janet, an Englishwoman married to an American businessman.

Moments before the clock reached the official opening hour of 6, Claudia, in what could be recorded as the final expression of citizen impatience over the repeated delays during the last year in beginning the tramway service, slipped under the turnstiles while her mother made ready to deposit the 50-cent fare.

Among the 25 persons to make the first crossing were Stephen Moore, a visitor from Columbus, Ohio, who

Pension Woes Under 1974 Law

By ROBERT METZ

Many small corporations are so appalled by the high costs entailed in the Pension Reform Act of 1974 that pension plans are being canceled by the thousands.

This means that tens of thousands of employees who have based their retirement hopes on such pension plans will have to set up their own individual retirement accounts or be left with no plan at all.

Some 5,000 employer pension plans have been terminated so far, according to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, a Federal corporation that provides limited benefits to employees whose plans have been terminated.

Employer concern is understandable. In order to meet the rigid standards of the law, every pension plan must be amended in fundamental respects. For example, one change, costly to corporate employers, requires that all full-time employees aged 25 or older must be included in the plan after one year's service. Before the act, many employers had five-year waiting periods.

The legal costs involved in amending small plans can be onerous. A Western Pennsylvania employer whose profit-sharing plan contained $15,000 in assets paid his lawyer $1,000 for the necessary amendments—to an amount equal to a year's contributions. He is upset but has not terminated his plan.

Wayne Leizzer, a pension expert and vice president of Eberstadt & Co., is concerned over the large number of small companies that are dropping their plans. He finds it ironic that the law, designed to protect employee rights, is actually forcing thousands of them out into the cold.

Mr. Leizzer notes that Congress recently provided limited relief for employees who received lump sum payments from terminated plans and thus became liable to ordinary income taxes on the proceeds. The rule affected employees who remained in their jobs and thus could not roll over the funds to a new employer plan.

Under an amendment to the 1974 law that was signed by President Ford on April 18, employees can roll over distributions to personal individual retirement accounts set up for that purpose.

The amendment covers all types of retirement plans—pension, profit-sharing, annuity and stock bonus plans. The employee must put the otherwise taxable funds into an I.R.A. plan within 60 days of distribution of the lump sum payments.

The I.R.A. assets will continue to grow on a tax-sheltered basis until the employee receives payments after retirement. Ordinarily, retirement cannot begin before age 59½, unless the employee suffers permanent disability.

The legislation came too late to prevent many employees from paying taxes on lump sum distributions following terminations of plans in 1974 and 1975. It is retroactive, however, and the employee can recover taxes paid in a two-step process.

The first step calls for setting up an I.R.A. plan by Dec. 31, 1976, at which time the employee must put into it the full amount, after taxes, that he received in the lump sum payment.

As for the second step, the employee must file an amended tax return with the Internal Revenue Service, claiming a tax refund for all taxes paid on the distribution, in which to place it in the I.R.A. plan.

Many employees whose pension plans have not only set up I.R.A. accounts to accept rollover distributions, but also have established separate plans and make yearly contributions on a tax-sheltered basis. Such plans allow the individual to set aside $1,500 or 15 per cent of gross annual earnings each year—whichever is less.

These plans are available to all those employers who have no pension programs, regardless of whether they once did.

Wayne Leizzer, a pension expert and vice president of Eberstadt & Co., is concerned over the large number of small companies that are dropping their plans. He finds it ironic that the law, designed to protect employee rights, is actually forcing thousands of them out into the cold.

Mr. Leizzer notes that Congress recently provided limited relief for employees who received lump sum payments from terminated plans and thus became liable to ordinary income taxes on the proceeds. The rule affected employees who remained in their jobs and thus could not roll over the funds to a new employer plan.

Earlier this spring Zenith disclosed that in cooperation with Corning Glass Works it had developed a color tube that it said had major pro- duction and economic advan- tages. The tube is being of- fered to others for manufac- ture under license. Sylvania said it decided against the Zenith-Corning glass bulb because it did not appear to offer savings and because its somewhat larger size would affect cabinet costs and styling.

Convention Spirit Sought in City

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY. Advertising, that strange, omnipresent and sometimes persuasive art form, will be used in an attempt to get New Yorkers, in the proper receptive spirit for the Democratic convention, which will be held in the city from July 12 through July 15.

CITIZENS COMMITTEE FOR THE DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION, INC. July 12-15, 1976 Citizens Committee logo.

And this evening at a cocktail party at Bonwit Teller, reporters, media representatives and business people will get the first look at the public service campaign created in behalf of the Citizens Committee for the Democratic National Convention.

Preston Robert Tisch, president and chairman of the executive committee of the Loews Corporation, is chairman of the Citizens Committee and, strangely enough, one of his agencies, Cavalieri Kleier Pearman, has volunteered to make the ads. Placement is in the hands of the Media Corporation of America.

The goal of the campaign is to get the people prepared for 25,000 visitors so that they will be actively involved in letting them know that New York is a great place to live and a great place to visit.

The public relations firm, according to O'Dwyer's Directory of Public Relations Firms, lists among its clients Mayor Beame, who appointed the Citizens Committee, Madison Square Garden, where the convention is being held, and the New York City Convention and Visitors Bureau, which couldn't be happier.

The convention is going to be a great opportunity for New York, Mr. Feingold continued, because it will provide an opportunity to overcome some of the negative publicity the city has received and do it with thousands of opinion leaders.

The logotype of the Citizens Committee is the Statue of Liberty "doffing" a star-spangled boater, which she certainly couldn't put on anyhow, because of all of those spikes.

executive vice president of Cavalieri Kleier Pearman.

And that hat tipping will be picked up in some of the print advertising that the agency has created, except in the case of the advertising the tippers will be run-of-the-mill, pleasant New Yorkers.

However, the initial ad in the campaign that will break in June will not include those New Yorkers. It will be mostly copy and will have the headline, "New York is having a Party this summer."

The ad will also point out some of the other events scheduled for the summer such as the Bicentennial celebration, Operation Sail, and the big fireworks display ("the largest fireworks display you ever saw") that Macy is sponsoring.

That all goes to prove, says the copy, "That no matter who the Democrats finally nominate as their Presidential candidate, their first choice was a real winner, New York City."

"It's a very up New York campaign," said Mr. Kleier, correctly.

So far the agency has prepared advertising for radio (two 60-second spots), television (two 30-second spots), newspapers, magazines and all types of out-of-home media—bus shelters, bus posters, subway car cards and commuter stations.

The TV material will have celebrity boosters and so far the committee has scheduled Eli Wallach and Julie Harris. "It's a people-to-people campaign," said Mr. Feingold.

New de Garmo Title for Posey

Because he wanted to give more time to activities outside of advertising, Chester I. Posey has asked to be relieved of the duties of president of de Garmo Inc., according to a house memo circulated by John de Garmo, the chairman, who will also take back the president's title.

Mr. Posey, long a heavy-weight within the Interpublic Group companies, will henceforth be vice chairman of de Garmo and, Mr. de Garmo notes, "Chet has assured me that his first interest and priority still lie with us; and well it should because he's helped to build us."

23 Silver Anvil Awards Last night in Chicago the Public Relations Society of America bestowed its prestigious Silver Anvil awards on 23 organizations.

Gulf was the big winner. MacLeod & Grove, won two for its business institutional program and for its nonprofit public affairs program, while its subsidiary, Gulf Trading Transportation, with Burson-Marsteller, was winner for employee relations.

Burson-Marsteller won again for the marketing job it did for the British people at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith.

Another double winner among firms was Carl Byoir & Associates, which won with programs for the Sugar Association and the Chamber of Commerce of Greater Kansas City. It was Byoir's third win with the Chamber.

A Transcontinental Pitch

Marvin Schwartz, president of New York Subways Advertising, and William Apfelbaum, his national sales manager, yesterday became the first human beings to make a formal transcontinental media pitch via American Telephone and Telegraph's Picturephone.

Using the facilities of Picturephone Meeting Service at 195 Broadway, the dynamic duo put on their electronic dog-and-pony show for the marketing folks at Fromm & Sichel, maker of Christian Brothers wines and brandies, who were in San Francisco with the people from their agency, Boisford/Ketchum.

Since it cost $6.50 a minute, the Subways boys limited their transmission to one hour and, afterward, Mr. Schwartz, trying hard to be quotable, said, "I wonder if Walter Cronkite started this way."

A Few Industries

As indicated in previous reports, the bulk of the investment required for antipollution purposes is concentrated in a few industries. Of the 1975 total of $3.55 billion, 70 percent was accounted for by five industries: electric utilities, petroleum, chemicals, nonferrous metals and paper. The same pattern holds for planned 1976 investment.

Measured another way, six industries had to devote more than 10 percent of their total investment to antipollution purposes in 1975. These included the five just mentioned, except electric utilities, plus iron and steel and the stone-clay-glass category. The biggest burdens fell on nonferrous metals with 24 percent of total investment, and on paper, with 17 percent.

Miss Walters to Lift Profit And Ratings, ABC Asserts

By LEONARD SLOANE

The hiring of Barbara Walters, the television personality, for its evening news program was portrayed yesterday by the American Broadcasting Companies as a move that would increase both its profits and its news coverage.

Leonard H. Goldenson, chairman of the broadcasting company, told stockholders at the annual meeting that the signing of Miss Walters to a $1-million-a-year contract was expected to "increase the ratings" of its television network news. "One rating point more will not only pay for her salary but will bring a handsome return to the company as well," he said.

In his prepared remarks to some 350 shareholders at the meeting, held in the ABC broadcast center at West 66th Street, Mr. Goldenson called Miss Walters—who has been the co-host of the "Today" show on the National Broadcasting Company network—"an exceptional broadcast journalist and an interviewer." He added that "her special skills will bring a new dimension to ABC News."

"adjusted voluntarily at the time we made the deal" with Miss Walters almost a month ago.

Miss Walters' salary was criticized by Reed J. Irvine, chairman of Accuracy in Media Inc., when he introduced a resolution proposing that ABC News employ an ombudsman to review its accuracy, fairness and balance. Asserting that the expense of an ombudsman operation might be $100,000 annually and comparing it to the reported salary of Miss Walters, he said, "The priorities are wrong."

The ombudsman proposal, along with related questions and comments, took up much of the time at the two-hour session. However it was defeated, with ABC reporting after the meeting that it obtained only 2.6 percent of the vote.

Leonard H. Goldenson, chairman of the American Broadcasting Companies, at the annual meeting.

Despite glowing reports of ABC's current financial condition and recent television ratings from Mr. Goldenson and Elton H. Rule, president, a number of stockholders were critical of certain company activities. Some of their remarks, however, were preceded by such statements as "I'm trying to be constructive" and "I'm saying this as a friend."

For example, Fred Rice observed that the total of three corporate segments—records, motion pictures and the combination of publishing, scenic attractions and others—lost money in three of the last five years. "I'd put a time limit on it for sure," he said, and Mr. Goldenson quickly agreed.

Mr. Rice voiced most of his complaints about the records division, which lost $28.3 million last year. "That's an awful lot of records," he pointed out.

Mr. Goldenson would not make any specific predictions about corporate results for the remainder of 1976. But he said that the second quarter should be "very strong" and that ABC expected to have "a very good full year."

As reported earlier, ABC's earnings rose 39 percent to $8.7 million on a 25 percent revenue gain to $313.7 million. It led the three networks in television ratings since the beginning of the 1975-76 "second season" early this year.

U.S. Deal Could Change Losses Other U.S. and Foreign Stock Exchanges To Profits for 3 Shipbuilders ices Committee to defend a proposed arrangement. Under the plan, the Navy would settle some $1.8 billion in claims by the three companies by reopening their contracts and giving them additional money.

The basic change would be to allow the shipbuilders cost escalation on ships they have failed to deliver to the Navy on schedule.

The three companies involved are the Ingalls Shipyard division of Litton Industries, the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock division of Tenneco Inc., and the Electric Boat division of the Dynamics Corporation. Among them, they expect a $467 million loss on 11 contracts they hold with the Navy to build 70 ships and submarines.

payments ranging from $178 million to $268 million, to make a profit ranging from $18.4 million to $153.3 million.

In confirming the basic accuracy of the figures supplied to reporters by an Aspin Aide, Mr. Clements placed the minimum anticipated profits for Litton at about $22 million; for Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock at $32 million; and for Electric Boat at $20 million.

Mr. Clements pointed out to reporters that the total of $74 million in profits would be contracts totaling $3 billion and taking up to eight years to complete.

Under critical questions by committee members, Mr. Clements repeatedly insisted that the proposed revision of the contracts would not amount to a bailout of the companies.

Rather, he said, the proposed arrangement was designed to achieve an "early and equitable resolution" of a problem that he said was reaching "crisis proportions," with the shipbuilders reluctant to take on new Navy work unless their past claims were settled.

Figures supplied by Pentagon officials to Representative Les Aspin, Democrat of Wisconsin, and a member of the committee, showed that under the new cost-escalation clause, Litton which faces a loss of $207 million on two contracts to build 35 ships, would be given an additional $259 million and make a profit ranging from $32 million to $47 million. The range in the profits depends on what new delivery dates and terms are set in the revised contracts.

He also told reporters "that Litton, which he noted has unconditionally guaranteed" the contracts of its Ingalls Shipbuilding division, had a "serious" cash-flow problem, growing in large measure out of its work for the Navy.

Even with the contractual relief, he noted, Litton faces a $130 million loss on its contract to build five helicopter carriers for the Navy.

"If that's a bailout, I don't understand what a bailout is," he observed at one point to the committee.

Destroyer Profit Expected

The loss on the helicopter carriers would be offset by a $112 million profit the company expects to make in building 30 destroyers to replace its old cost-escalation payments.

According to Defense Department officials, Litton has complained that the additional payments would not be sufficient to solve its cash-flow problems.

Mr. Clements disclosed that the Defense Department was discussing other contractual relief for the company, such as amending clauses dealing with warranties on the ships and penalties on late deliveries.

The opposition to the proposed arrangement seemed to be abating within the committee, which was initially critical of the emergency plan for bypassing the Navy's normal procedures for settling claims by shipbuilders.

The committee majority seemed prepared to go along with the basic Clements argument that the emergency action was necessary to remove "the acrimonious atmosphere" between the Navy and the shipbuilders and to get built the ships needed by the Navy.

In a speech on the Senate floor, Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin, accused Mr. Clements and the shipbuilders of engineering a "bait and switch" play "to bail out defense contractors who have incurred huge cost overruns because of their own inefficiency and failure to deliver on time."

Fred Goldin of Goldin-Feldman Inc., one of the largest fur manufacturers in the United States and president of the American Fur Industry, a trade association, said there were no reasons why the ban on Soviet furs or those brought in from China should not be lifted.

country and that the Soviet Union was also a major importer of fur garments such as moutons and sheepskin coats.

Sojuzpushkina, one of the oldest foreign trade organizations in the Soviet Union, is made up of 6,500 enterprises and companies. More than 350 ranches breed furs and more than 1,200 state and collective farms produce nine million karakul pelts. In addition to mink, the Soviets produce one million blue fox, 400,000 silver fox and a wide variety of wild furs.

buyers from 27 countries and usually include from 15 to 20 American buyers. The auctions generate about a tenth of the billion-dollar annual total of Soviet fur pelt sales.

Sojuzpushkina will hold a three-day exhibit of skins and fur garments beginning next Wednesday at the Statler Hilton Hotel, under the sponsorship of the Amtorg Trading Corporation, its American trade representative.

Mr. Mechutan, who has attended the Leningrad auction in July for the last 30 years, pointed out that the exhibit would give manufacturers, many of whom were not familiar with Soviet furs, an opportunity to examine and handle the pelts.

Shortage Is Cited

"With numerous ranchers out of business, there is a shortage of mink skins in this country," Mr. Goldin said, "and it does not appear logical to exclude the skins when coats manufactured with these skins are permitted to enter the country." He said that most manufacturers were of the same opinion.

Mr. Baksey pointed out that the Russians themselves were the biggest consumers of the furs produced in their

Futures Prices Fall For Soybean Meal, Ending Long Surge

The long and strong surge in soybean meal prices, which had been in progress since the July contract on the Chicago Board of Trade closed at $159.90, off about 60 cents a ton.

Since the start of May the price has risen more than $22 a ton due to heavy demand for the meal in Europe from farmers short of pasture for their livestock. In Rotterdam, the Netherlands, the cash price dropped $3 or so a ton yesterday, perhaps because of renewed Brazilian soybean meal competition, and this in Chicago.

The wheat harvest is under way in Texas, and prices drifted lower in Chicago, where the July futures contract closed at $3.50, off 5 1/2 cents a bushel.

Situation Report

Another factor was the Department of Agriculture's situation report that said the bumper harvest probably would force farm prices for wheat to last year's level of about $3 a bushel. In mid-April, prices at the farm level averaged about $5.50.

So far it looks as if the world will produce a record wheat crop and that most countries will import less wheat than last year, the Agriculture Department said.

July world sugar futures broke through the 14 cents a pound level yesterday on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, a chart point that has been closely watched by traders who base their trading on charts. The contract, which had closed at 14.38 cents a pound, dropped as low as 13.97 cents and then recovered a little to close at 14.02. There was little trading in futures, which, but trading was brisk.

"Cocoa futures, which have been high in recent months, also moved down yesterday during a session marked by slow trading on the New York Cocoa Exchange. The July delivery closed at 80.50 cents a pound, down from 82.50.

Senate Panel Backs Gas Deregulation

WASHINGTON, May 18 (AP)—The Senate Commerce Committee approved today, as expected, a compromise bill for partial deregulation of natural gas prices, a move that would raise prices for the fuel to consumers. By a 16-to-1 vote, the committee sent to the floor a measure designed to break the months-long legislative impasse over natural gas deregulation.

The bill would retain some price controls while eliminating others. Committee aides said consumers could expect natural gas price increases of 10 to 15 percent a year under the legislation.

Backers say the bill is a "middle ground" between the measure the Senate passed last October phasing out price controls and the bill the House passed in February broadening them over major producers.

Antitrust Unit Studying Zinc Pricing

Aluminum Sheet Shipments Up 23%

The Aluminum Association reported yesterday that net shipments of ingot and mill products for the first two months had risen by 23.8 percent to 1.85 billion pounds. Sheet and plate shipments totaled 798.5 million pounds, up 23 percent, while extrusions and drawn tube shipments at 284.1 million pounds ran 24.4 percent higher than in the corresponding 1975 period.

CANADA BACKS OUT OF LOCKHEED DEAL

Continued From Page 59 banks that would round out a vital financial restructuring whose first phase was consummated a year ago. Signing of the agreement is expected to be announced next week.

Under the proposed Canadian bank deal, a group of Canada's 10 national banks was to have financed $375 million of work on the patrol planes during the first three years of the five-year production program.

The Government would have repaid the banks in the final two years, including interest above the prime Canadian rate.

The Trudeau Government needed the banks' help because of a shortfall in the budget for the first three years, and because of political problems in here in adding to previously established budget levels.

The Canadians originally announced last November that they would buy the Lockheed planes, but it was not until April 30 that a contract was signed. And this was subject to completion of final details of the Canadian bank financing.

Those final details proved unattainable, and the banks pulled out of the project over the weekend. Mr. Trudeau, asked about the banks' problems, told Parliament he understood the reason for the banks' action was that "they do not feel they have the same type of guarantee" from Lockheed that the American banks have.

He did not explain further. He could have been alluding to the United States Government's guarantee of up to $250 million in loans to Lockheed by American banks.

It was this United States guarantee, which just squeaked through Congress in 1971 (by Congress of an additional capital subscription of $2.2 billion as part of an increase by all present members of $8.3 billion in the bank's capital in four years. The bank has also negotiated new membership by 12 Western European countries and Japan, which are expected to add $745 million in capital as they enter the bank.

With these increased funds, and a special petrodollar fund of $500 million from Venezuela, Mr. Ortiz Menz, a former Mexican Minister of Finance, said the bank would be able to continue increasing aid to the region's poorer countries. During 1975, the 15 poorer countries received $562 million in loans, up 44 percent from the 1974 level.

Because of a recent rise in interest rates in capital markets, where the Inter-American Development Bank borrows money in the United States and Europe, the bank is under pressure to increase interest rates on its loans from ordinary capital, which remained at 8 percent during 1975.

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, who met here with Mr. Ortiz Menz and other finance ministers during a week-end stopover, has urged the bank's lending rates be increased, in line with a recent increase by the World Bank to 8.75 percent annual interest.

"We must find models of development that correspond to our social realities and historical origins, and not passively imitate the great industrial societies, however successful they have been," Mr. Echeverria said.

Claridge Hotel, Up for Sale in Court, Draws No Bidders

ATLANTIC CITY, May 18 (UPI)—The Claridge Hotel was put up for sale in bankruptcy court here yesterday, but there was no bidder for the 21-story hotel, known as the "Skyscraper by the Sea" since it opened on Christmas Day in 1930.

This sale took place in City Commission chambers, presided over by Federal Judge William Lipton. He ordered the 420-room hotel sold to settle claims of creditors and the Guarantee Bank of Atlantic City which foreclosed on a $1.2 million mortgage last December and then spent an additional $500,000 to maintain the hotel.

One way it obtained the money was from an interest-free demand loan to the subsidiary by its president, who was also a vice president of Champion International.

The Consolidated Foods Corporation said it made "sensitive" payments totaling $14,610 since 1969. Of this, $10,000 was for foreign political contributions.

The GAF Corporation said that during the first quarter of this year it began an internal investigation "of a possible abuse during the past several years of one of [its] cooperative advertising programs involving a domestic customer." In March a special outside counsel was named to conduct a detailed examination, still uncompleted.

store-for-store sales increases, national economic improvements and a comparison with poor operating results a year ago.

Kresge plans to open about 200 new K Mart discount stores this year, he said, compared with 132 opened last year. Earlier in 1976, Kresge had said it expected to open only 170 this year.

Sales of soft goods have been the "strongest factor" in the quarter's business, Mr. Devar said. He added, however, that while "we are encouraged by fundamental economic conditions," Kresge has kept its commitments for fall and winter seasonal goods "rather conservative."

Heavy Expansion Cited

Kresge, which Wall Street analysts say stands a good chance this year of next year, J. C. Penney from its niche as the country's second-largest retailer in volume after Sears, Roebuck and Company, has gained in sales primarily from its K Mart expansion program in the K Mart division.

Since 1971, when the company had annual sales of $3.1 billion, volume has more than doubled, reaching a level of $6.7 billion in the most recent fiscal year. Penney's sales in the year ended Jan. 31 were $7.5 billion. Sears' topped $13 billion in that year.

Stanley S. Kresge, son of the company's late founder, Sebastian S. Kresge, did not stand yesterday for reelection to the board. It is the first time since the company's founding that a member of the Kresge family will not be on the board.

After beginning a program of opening smaller, 40,000-square-foot stores, K Mart now has about 935 K Marts and is the largest discount store operator in the country. Much of its operations are systematized and operational costs are helped by that policy.

Loehmann's Inc., a New York based discount fashion chain, said yesterday that its net income in the third fiscal quarter ended April 26 rose to $739,000, or 55 cents a share, from $725,000, or 54 cents a share. Sales increased to $21.2 million from $17.2 million a year earlier.

Pound Again Slips Below $1.80 Level, But Closes High

LONDON, May 18 (UPI)—The British pound dropped below $1.80 for the second consecutive day today but recovered to close well above that level.

The pound opened at $1.802, slightly lower than its close yesterday of $1.8045, the quickly slipped to $1.7994. Pressure first eased on its pound when the dollar attracted some profit taking. Also, the Bank of England was believed to have stepped in with minimal support at midmorning. The pound firmed slightly to close at $1.8110.

Britain's monetary authorities showed an improvement of 0.3 percent to 37.6 percent on its effective devaluation calculations on the currencies of 10 major trading nations.

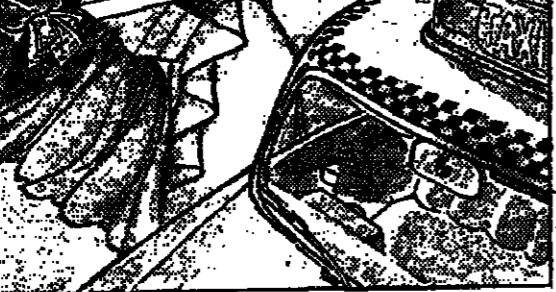

Despite the improvement, dealers said they could see little hope of a sustained rally by the pound until there was proof that the British labor unions had accepted phase two of the Government's pay policy and that inflation was coming under control.

The drop in the strength of the pound is already hurting Britons seeking vacation abroad. Most tour operators have a clause in their contracts to cover falls in the rate of exchange, and spending money will be cut by the poor rate of exchange Britons will get for their pounds.

The dollar, maintaining its strength against other major currencies in spite of some profit taking, continued to be buoyed by an increase in United States Treasury bill rate

Dyson Finds Companies Upset by Personal Taxes

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, May 18—The State Commerce Commissioner, John S. Dyson, said today that a new survey of hundreds of corporations disclosed that executives were most concerned over high personal income taxes, not corporate income taxes, as potential spurs to their companies leaving the state.

At a news conference, Mr. Dyson said he would therefore push hard for a package of tax reductions for the next fiscal year, particularly for the elimination of the state's 2.5 percent surcharge on income taxes, which yields about $100 million.

The Commissioner's comments were based on preliminary findings of a survey his office is conducting of the 2,300 companies in the state that employ 100 or more workers. So far, Mr. Dyson said he had surveyed 700 companies, most of them outside New York City.

Mr. Dyson said his initial findings were "surprisingly similar" to those uncovered in a survey by The New York Times of New York City companies, except that the companies outside the city emphasized personal taxes much more than corporate taxes. The Times reported on Sunday that its survey of 40 large city-based corporations showed executives giving roughly equal weight to both.

With reference to his tax proposals, Mr. Dyson said Governor Carey was "moving in the direction" of supporting his proposal to let the 2.5 percent income tax surcharge lapse after this year. He said Dyson was stressing the impor-

ance of keeping businesses in New York. Because of the Governor's conflict-of-interest directives, Mr. Dyson said he could not have intervened directly in the initial decision to select printing operations in Connecticut, but that he made his views known to the company executives. He said that the cost of having the papers printed in New York would be "somewhat higher but not significantly so."

The Commissioner said he wanted the Legislature to address itself to the tax situation this session, even if it was simply in the form of an agreement among the leaders to eliminate the surcharge next year. He said he disagreed with a Republican approach to enact tax cuts now that would go into effect later in the year, should revenues from existing taxes come in much higher than the Governor's projections.

Variable-Rate Mortgages Being Tested in Calif

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES—A growing number of Californians—some reluctantly—are buying homes with variable-rate mortgages, a form of home financing that many lenders want to export across the country. The innovation is still considered experimental, and the indication so far is that home buyers are far from convinced that variable-rate loans are as good for them as they are for the lenders.

In variable-rate mortgages, the interest rate is not fixed over the life of the loan. It can rise or decline periodically—typically, every six months—based on fluctuations in overall credit conditions in the economy.

Five of the nation's largest savings and loan associations, several smaller ones, and California's Wells Fargo Bank have all but halted new commitments for traditional fixed-interest mortgages. And at its 62 branches in populous San Diego County, the world's largest bank, the Bank of America, on May 10 began an experiment with variable-rate mortgages as a possible prelude to a statewide switch.

"This truly is a pilot program," Robert Campbell, a Bank of America executive who is supervising the San Diego experiment, said. "Our research tells us the public has a lot of doubts about it. Our research tells us to go easy, and we are proceeding with extreme caution."

For more than a generation, Americans have bought homes by agreeing to pay for them over a long period of time—generally 20 to 30 years—using money borrowed from a bank or savings institution at a predetermined interest rate. The rate remained the same over the life of the loan. Except for increased taxes or borrowers' insurance, the monthly payments did not change.

Interest rates were as low as 2 percent to 3 percent prior to World War II. They generally averaged 4 percent to 7 percent during the middle-income housing boom following the war, and climbed to as high as 11 percent during a credit squeeze in 1974. They now average about 8.5 percent to 9 percent, with a 20 percent down payment nationally, but have recently started to rise above 9 percent in some areas of the country because of stronger demand.

The lenders who advocate flexible mortgage rates argue that the present fixed rate home financing method could eventually bankrupt them. They complain that it locks them into low rates for long periods of time even though they may have to pay increasing amounts of interest to depositors in order to attract funds. And they maintain that fixed rates are not fair to the newer generation of home buyers.

"What we've been using is a system a little like Russian roulette," said Richard H. Deihl, the president of Home Savings and Loan Association here, the largest association in the country and a front-runner in variable rate financing.

But after a few weeks, they quietly abolished the differential and now charge the same in most cases as other institutions do for fixed-rate loans. The Bank of America, however, charges one-quarter percentage point less at this point for its new type of mortgage. The bank requires the variable rate in San Diego on mortgages of $50,000 or more, and makes it optional for lower mortgages.

Savings and loan associations and banks fall into two categories—those regulated by the Federal Government, and those by state agencies. Currently, several states besides California allow state-chartered savings institutions and banks to make variable rate loans. A number of institutions in New England and the Middle West are experimenting with versions of the plan but most of the action is here in California.

Federally chartered savings institutions cannot make such loans if they involve any increase in the monthly house payment, although they can lawfully increase interest rates under some circumstances by extending the number of months or years in which a loan is paid off if borrowers agree beforehand.

Last year, Federal regulators proposed giving these federally chartered savings institutions much broader authority to make such loans. But they ran into a fusillade of resistance from organized labor, consumer groups and some Congressmen. They finally gave up, reflecting the emotional intensity of the issue.

Executives of the five large state-chartered savings and loan associations here—

Home Great W. tar, Citizens W. that began w. this rate mortg. all most th. major hit on the loans were a said some $2.5 of variable t. were written b. panies. While some resista. say the public. five institution type of loan about 15 perc. loan particula. 95 percent of loans.

Take Hrabosky for fast, fast relief.

Al Hrabosky, the Mad Hungarian, is the best reliever in baseball. So St. Louis fans wave signs like "We hlove Hrabosky" and "Hrattle 'm Hrabosky." The former Little League psyches out batters with evil eyes, scowls, and a whole crazy mad mound act. Hvisit Hrabosky hwith hPeople.

Divorce, Hollywood style. Producer Bob Radnitz and screenwriter Joanna Crawford collaborate on G-rated films but their private life is very X. Sure, they've split but that doesn't keep them from bathing etc. together.

That's Tyrone Power's little girl, Romina. With husband Albano Carrisi, she's recorded "To Love Each Other Once Again"—a smash all over Europe. Now 24, she'd appeared in 14 films by the time she was 17.

What's Sir Edmund Hillary been up to since Everest? For the last fifteen years he's been building hospitals, schools and bridges for his beloved Sherpas...hopes to save them from tourism and modernity.

Jimmy Carter had a beautiful reason to bare his bicuspid plate fund-raising dinner, he posed with all the power in Detroit—the Big Three auto makers, the president of the UAW, and the M

Ayyyy...The Fonz is in a happy daze. He's making gobs of money...is the heartthrob of "the training-bra set." But the real Henry Winkler is a troubled intellectual...a Yale Drama grad who'd rather be a heavy actor.

David Rockefeller, self-made man. He worked his way up to Chairman of Chase Manhattan...now speaks for the banking world. Sample: "I think the media and some members of Congress are trying to use the banks as scapegoats."

Madame la Générale. Valérie André is a surgeon, helicopter pilot, angel of mercy, Colonel's wife—and now, at 54, France's first woman general. She served in Indochina and Algeria...got the Croix de Guerre and Légion d'Honneur for heroism.

Have a ball. Get into the fastest, happiest game in town. Get into People.

It's what's happening in magazines. It's now. Today. The Scene in a Magazine. The mid-70's in print.

Naturally, it's the mid-70's people who are picking up on People...more and more of them all the time. On July 19, our rate base will hit 1,800,000. That means an adult audience of 11,088,000* Some audience for a magazine that's little more than two years old.

If you're an advertiser, these are exactly the people you want to talk to. They're the young, educated, prospering, urban men and women who are able to buy and open-minded enough to try. They set the pace and start the trends.

And we know for a fact, they love People so much they read it page for page. Cover to cover.

All of which makes People the ideal new setting for all kinds of people products...cars, cosmetics, food, tobacco, appliances, liquor, travel, credit cards, you name it. And with People's low out of pocket cost, you can afford to run the kind of high-frequency campaign that builds and builds.
